Nazis, Joined By Agrarians, Form Largest Czech Party

Coalition Gives Hitlerites Plurality in Parliament.

Premier and Benes In Long Night Talk

Converted Group's Minister Quits Post in Cabinet.

European Developments.

The Sudeten (Nazi) Party achieved a plurality in the Czechoslovakian Parliament by a merger with the German Agrarians who withdrew from the government.

Czech Nazis Gain.

By the United Press.

Prague, Czechoslovakia, March 22. The Nazi Sudeten Germans under Konrad Henlein became the dominant party in Parliament tonight by a merger with the Agrarian League, which withdrew from the government.

The Agrarians are one of the smaller German minority parties which had supported President Benes in his efforts to resist Reichsfuehrer Hitler's "Nazification" of Czechoslovakia.

A cabinet committee on which each government party was represented by one cabinet member met tonight and discussed the new alignment. After the conference, which lasted several hours, Prime Minister Dr. Milan Hodza visited President Benes.

Agrarians Second Party.

The surprise move, hailed by Nazis as bringing nearer a German fulfillment of Bismarck's 50-year-old theory that "the master of Bohemia is the master of Europe," gave Henlein 49 deputies in the lower chamber of Parliament.

The Sudeten party's working strength is uncertain, however, because of the division of the 300 seats among 14 parties.

The Czechoslovakian Agrarians are relegated to second position in parliamentary strength, with 44 deputies, but remain the country's most powerful political union.

Third are the Czechoslovakian Social Democrats, with 38 seats, but any Sudeten collaboration with them appeared doubtful because the Democrats are a workingmen's party, with strong Marxist leanings. Next in strength are the Communists, with 30 seats, and then the National Socialists, leftist, but opposed to extreme Marxism.

The German Agrarians had sought for several years to collaborate with the Czechoslovakian Agrarians, but broke over the troublesome issue of German minority interests.

Veteran Minister Quits.

Minister Without Portfolio Prof. Franz Spina, leader of the German Agrarians, submitted his resignation to President Benes tonight. He had belonged to every Czechoslovakian cabinet since 1926, when the German parties were admitted into the government.

The German Agrarian Party's announcement said:

Nazis Jail Sons Of Archduke on Secret Charges

7 Others of Old Nobility in Cells; Hitler Spurns Windsor Plea.

By the United Press.

Vienna, March 22.—Two sons of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, whose assassination started the World War, and seven others of the old nobility whose lives have been devoted to restoration of the Hapsburg monarchy were herded into a police cell tonight, with pickpockets and drunks, by Nazi police.

Their collar buttons, suspenders and shoelaces were taken away to prevent their taking their own lives.

Reichstuehrer Hitler wrote to the Duke of Windsor in Paris, refusing his personal plea for release of Baron Louis Rothschild of the famous banking family, who is in a Vienna jail. The baron was the duke's host on several occasions.

Nazi police listed 94 "political suicides and 100 attempted suicides.

The nine monarchist prisoners represented almost the entire coterie of leaders who sought to place young Archduke Otto on the throne—a dream shattered by Hitler's annexation of Austria nine days ago.

Besides the archduke's sons—Duke Maximilian, 36, and Ernest Duke of Hohenberg, 35,—the prisoners included:

Prince Karl Emil Fuerstenberg, 71, Austria's former imperial ambassador to the court of Madrid. He has been an intimate friend of former Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany for many years and has large estates both in Germany and Austria.

Baron Karl Werkmann, 60, last personal secretary of the late Emperor Charles.

Mourners Absent At Funeral for Fey, Wife and Son

Vienna, March 22 (AP).—Former Vice Chancellor Emil Fey, who killed himself rather than face the future in Nazi Austria, was buried today in Vienna's Central Cemetery without mourners.

With him were buried his wife and young son who were found dead at his side March 16, apparently killed by Maj. Fey before the former chief of the Austrian Heimwehr committed suicide.

(The World Jewish Congress in Geneva, appealing to the League of Nations Council to consider the "Martydom of Austrian Jews," asserted Jewish burials in Vienna had jumped to 140 a day.)

Belgian Aide Hints French Army Ban

Brussels, March 22 (AP).—Foreign Minister Paul Henry Spaak today told the Chamber of Deputies "Belgium is under no obligation to permit passage of French troops across its territory in event of an attack on Czechoslovakia."

Spaak declared that article 16 of League of Nations' covenant, which governs such free passage facilities, has been recognized as of "optional character."

250,000 Visitors Expected When Celebration Opens Sunday.

D. C. Spring Mecca.

The official thermometer reached a maximum of 85.2 degrees in Washington yesterday. Highest temperatures at points in the South, including typical winter vacation meccas, follow:

Miami ..... 80 Lynchburg .. 86
Tampa ..... 84 Louisville ... 88
Key West .. 82 Atlanta 82

This is Cherry Blossom Time in Washington, officially and in capital letters.

The city fathers issued the manifesto yesterday, after 85.2 degrees of temperature had brought out the blooms a week earlier than expected.

With the heat literally turned on them, the District Commissioners and their advisory committee hurriedly decided time was too short to plan a blossom festival and compromised on Cherry Blossom Time in Washington.

The celebration will be opened Sunday, when the floral display at the Tidal Basin in West Potomac Park is expected to be at the peak, and its main feature will be a fireworks show Monday night at 8 near the southeast corner of the basin.

C. Melvin Sharpe, assistant to the president of the Potomac Electric Power Co. and general chairman of the arrangements committee, said the pyrotechnics would cost about $2,000. The amount will be raised, among merchants, restaurateurs, hotel men and others who will benefit by the predicted influx of 250,000 visitors this week-end.

There will be no blossom queen

Viscount Churchill Is Missing in Spain

London, March 22 (AP).—The Spanish medical aid committee here expressed fear today for the safety of Viscount Churchill, of Wychwood, its representative in Barcelona.

Committee officials said that they had not heard from Lord Churchill—a peer with pronounced Socialist tendencies—since last December 27, when he wrote from Paris, saying he was returning to resume his duties in Barcelona. The Spanish Embassy said the 47-year-old viscount was not on the list of Britons known to be in government Spain.

Killer's Name Kept Secret in Daugherty Case

Ballistic Test Hidden as High Feeling Grows Among Citizens.

Results of ballistic tests, reportedly naming the police slayer of Theodore B. Daugherty, were withheld by Arlington County authorities yesterday as the youthful Washington musician was buried with military honors in a secluded section of Arlington National Cemetery.

Local police said they were "without authority" to release results of the ballistic examination. Arlington officials, it was reported, requested the report of Lieut. John Fowler be kept secret because of "high feeling" among residents of Falls Church and the county.

Examination of weapons used by Falls Church Policemen Edwin Scheid and Herbert Knox—accused of firing six shots at Daugherty's car early Sunday—was completed yesterday by the Washington Police Department's ballistic expert. His report, it was learned, was submitted to Arlington police.

Sheriff Howard B. Fields, however, said he "knew nothing" of the ballistic test and "didn't know there had been any." Lieut. Fowler said the findings were transmitted to Virginia authorities by Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of local detectives.

The ballistic expert compared the bullet taken from Daugherty's head with barrel markings on test bullets fired from the policemen's

Brazil and Reich Mediate in Secret

Rio de Janeiro, March 22 (AP).—Brazil and Germany worked behind a curtain of official silence today to smooth out differences over the Brazilian ban on Nazi activities.

Informed quarters said Germany was making more friendly approaches than a few days ago, when President Vargas rejected a German protest against the ban his authoritarian regime imposed.

Resentment was aroused in the Brazilian press over the Berlin foreign office organ's expression of dissatisfaction yesterday.

Yellow Fever Vaccine Found; 40,000 Tests Show Efficacy

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 22—A new vaccine for yellow fever was announced today by the Rockefeller Foundation.

The report revealed that 40,000 persons in South America have been vaccinated with it in the past year and that it is expected to protect the United States, probably for all time, from invasion by "yellow jack."

The vaccine is the first for yellow fever ever available for the general public.

The need for a vaccine to protect the United States became suddenly acute two years ago. Up to that time the medical profession of the world had accepted the belief that yellow fever was extinct in all countries which mopped up the "carrier," the mosquito aedes aegypti.

Then the Rockefeller Foundation discovered that yellow jack was rampant in South American jungles.

It was pointed out by Rockefeller physicians that airplane passengers were entering the United States after exposure to the jungle fever.

"The vaccination," Raymond D. Fosdick, president of the Rockefeller Foundation, announced today, "during 1937 of more than 38,000 persons in Brazil and some 2,000 in Colombia . . . gives every indication that efficient protection of populations exposed to yellow fever is in sight . . .

"The method of control so successful in the case of urban yellow fever, i. e., the biological control of the insect vector, is not applicable in the case of jungle yellow fever. The only hope of prevention at the present times lies in individual immunization of exposed populations by vaccination."

U. S. Families Flee Mexican Oil Districts

Anti-Foreign Sentiment Perils Americans in Tehuantepec.

Daniels Sees Cardenas on Orders Phoned to Him by Hull.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, March 22.—Operators of Mexico's expropriated foreign petroleum industry today rushed evacuation of American and other foreign workers from isolated areas where "Mexico for Mexicans" sentiment mounted.

The evacuations, described as purely precautionary, proceeded as 10,000 students paraded here and the Confederation of Mexican Workers (C. T. M.) ordered a nation-wide "jubilee" for tomorrow.

Officials of the 17 British and American companies affected said they hoped to get all foreigners out of remote fields and camps during the night.

Thiry-three persons, including eight children, were flown here tonight in two planes from Tuxpan, Vera Cruz, where they had been assembled from Aguila's rich Poza Rica field.

President Cardenas, meanwhile, assured Mexican industry that expropriation was not contemplated against any other business.

1,300 Foreigners Involved.

United States Ambassador Josephus Daniels called on President Cardenas late today for a 45-minute talk concerning the oil situation, but refused to discuss the meeting.

He disclosed, however, that he acted on Secretary Hull's telephoned instructions.

L. L. Anderson, general manager of the Huasteca Oil Co., said Ed Borrego, superintendent of the Standard Oil of New Jersey refinery at Tampico, reported in a telephone conversation he had been held "virtual prisoner" by workers demanding payment of a sum of money.

Borrego declared the oil syndicate workers told him "you had better not try to leave until the money is paid," Anderson said.

Anderson said his company's other American employes, numbering 65, already were concentrated in Mexico City and Tampico or sent to the United States.

Firms Appeal to Hull.

Four American companies filed a brief today with Secretary Hull in Washington charging a "manifest denial of justice" in Mexico and asking support of the United States Government.

They were Huasteca, Standard Oil of California, the Mexico-Sinclair Petroleum Corporation and the Penn-Mex Fuel Co.

Governors of 20 states gathered in the Mexican capital and assured Cardenas of their support.

While commodity prices rose as a result of depreciation of the peso, oil workers joined the C. T. M. in demanding "direct action" against merchants responsible.

Japan Studies Oil Crisis.

Tokyo, March 22 (AP).—Government sources today said Mexico's expropriation of American and British oil companies was being studied by Japanese authorities for the possibilities it holds for an oil import agreement with Mexico.

Minnie (or Was It Malky?) Penguin Departs This Life

Malcolm, or Minnie, as the case may be, is dead.

Dr. William M. Mann, director of National Zoological Park, reluctantly broke the sad news yesterday about one of the two baby penguins. Whether the deceased was Malcolm, hatched March 12, or Minnie, hatched three days later, no one will ever know for certain.

Always looking on the bright side, Dr. Mann said:

"The National Museum now has a splendid specimen of a penguin chick."

Thus Minnie, or Malcolm, will be a boon to science even in death for infant jackass penguins, dead or alive, are extremely rare.

TVA Chairman Ousted; H. A. Morgan Moved Up; House Kills 'Key' Dam

$112,000,000 Project at Gilbertsville, Ky., Defeated, 186-157.

Democratic Ranks Split on Roll Call

Jealousies of Legislators From Other Sections Doom Measure.

By Sidney Olson.

Foes of the Tennessee Valley Authority won a significant victory in the House yesterday when the members, by a 186-to-157 vote, turned thumbs down on the "keystone" of the TVA—the proposed $112,000,000 dam at Gilbertsville, Ky.

The House, by that margin, refused to concur in a Senate amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill, which would have committed the Government to a $2,613,000 start on the huge dam which would back up a lake 180 miles long and 70 miles wide.

How Chamber Voted.

The Democrats split straight across on the roll call, after a standing vote had been counted as 105 for, 93 against. The figures in breakdown:

For—157.

Democrats, 140; Republicans, 5; Farmer-Labor, 4; Progressives, 8.

Against—186.

Democrats, 111; Republicans, 75.

The only Republicans voting for the bill were the two Tennessee Representatives, B. Carroll Reece and J. Will Taylor; Usher L. Burdick and William Lemke, of North Dakota, and James C. Oliver, of Maine.

Originally the House authorized only $285,000 to make preliminary surveys of the proposed dam. The Senate, under the urging of Senator George W. Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, father of the TVA, added the $2,613,000 appropriation to begin work on the vast dam.

Norris could not be reached for comment last night. His disappointment was certain, as he has repeatedly declared that the national clamor for a Congressional investigation of the TVA was brought about by propagandists for the private utilities, seeking to thwart the future expansion of the TVA.

Killed by Jealousy.

The Gilbertsville dam, at the other end of the horseshoe begun by the Norris Dam, apparently was killed by the combined jealousies of scores of other Democrats from other sections, impatient at the thought of so many Federal dollars expended in the development of one area.

Numerous speeches to that effect were made, one of them significantly by Representative John A. Martin, of Colorado, an Administration Democrat, member of the House liberal bloc, and invariably heretofore in the vanguard of New Deal measures.

Martin slashed at the Gilbertsville appropriation strictly from a sectional point of view, declaring:

"I want the House to know there are other rivers in this country. I want to know why we should spend millions to build a dam on every single damsite in the Tennessee River when the benefits of that dam are confined to that one section."

This argument was used throughout the afternoon by the Republicans, with telling effect, as Rep-

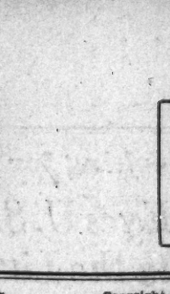
Morgan Avoided Post in Cabinet

By the Associated Press.

Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan, who became chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority yesterday by White House mandate, was President Roosevelt's first choice for Secretary of Agriculture.



MORGAN.

When the 70-year-old former president of the University of Tennesse replied, courteously, but firmly, that he would not accept the position ultimately filled by Henry A. Wallace, Mr. Roosevelt placed him on the board of directors of the TVA.

TVA then announced he was the acknowledged spokesman for "the most purely American native-born element of colonial descent," referring to Tennesee Valley people.

Dr. Morgan, at Louisiana State University, fought the cattle tick and charted migrations of the boll weevil. He functioned as director of the agriculture experiment station of the University of Tennessee. He became president of the university 20 years ago.

During the World War he was food administrator for Tennessee.

Long Battle Forecast in Congress and Courts Over Dismissal.

President Denies Opposing Inquiry

He Blames Such Reports on Special Writers and Columnists.

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt yesterday summarily removed Dr. Arthur E. Morgan as chairman and director of the Tennessee Valley Authority, thus precipitating what is believed will be a long and bitter controversy in Congress and the Federal courts.

In the next breath the President announced he had named Harcourt A. Morgan, one of the TVA directors, as chairman of that agency. He deferred for the present the nomination of a successor to Arthur Morgan as one of the three directors of the TVA.

Mr. Roosevelt also revealed he would send a message to Congress today dealing with the internal controversy which has wracked the TVA and led to the ouster of its chairman. Attached to this message, he said, will be the record of the inquiry he conducted into the TVA dissension and a copy of the Attorney General's opinion citing his authority for removing Arthur Morgan.

Calls Stories Untrue.

In a sharp, curt tone, the President at his press conference then proceeded to brand as without truth and made out of whole cloth stories that he was opposed to a Congressional investigation of TVA, which he said had been circulated by special writers and columnists.

He did not, however, assert he desired such an investigation. Nor has Mr. Roosevelt expressed such a desire so far, although he said he was not opposed to a Congressional investigation.

Informed that the President had removed him from office, former Chairman Morgan, at his Yellow Springs (Ohio) home, told the United Press he had nothing to say at this time. He said he was leaving later in the evening for Chicago and might have a statement within a day or two.

Dismissal Anticipated.

"Of course, after the President's statement yesterday afternoon his action today was inevitable and I more or less anticipated the dismissal," the United Press quoted him as saying.

Reaction on Capitol Hill both supported and criticized the President's action. Administration leaders said the President had acted within his rights and properly after Arthur Morgan's recalcitrant attitude. Those pressing for a Congressional investigation of the TVA denounced the action.

Senator H. Styles Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire, said the President's action was that "of the typical dictator." He characterized the Morgan incident as an "American Dreyfus case."

"Is Dr. Morgan to be banished as was Dreyfus to save the reputation of other officials of the TVA?" Bridges demanded to know, adding: "The President has convicted an innocent man without a fair trial."

Bridges, who several days ago said that if Arthur Morgan were ousted he would sponsor a resolution for the removal of his two colleagues — Harcourt Morgan and David Lilienthal—said he wished to confer with Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, co-sponsor of the demand for a Senate inquiry, and others before he determined on a course of action.

It was generally agreed, however, that the prospects for a sweeping investigation of the TVA by a Congressional committee had improved. Arthur Morgan has requested such

Administration Makes Last Plea For Profits Tax

Magill Stresses Need of Levy to Hostile Senate Group.

By Robert C. Albright.

Administration tax spokesmen yesterday made a last stand before the Senate Finance Committee for retention of the undivided profits tax principle in the 1938 revenue law, but a predominant majority of the Senate committee remained adamant against it.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Roswell Magill said his department favors the 16 to 20 per cent undistributed profits tax range provided in the House bill "as a means of equalizing the distribution of the total tax burden."

The Treasury tax expert conceded the need for further liberalization of loss deduction features of the capital gains tax. He said equitable taxation "calls for more generous treatment for capital losses, but not, it seems, for more generous treatment for capital gains."

Magill's testimony marked closing of Senate Finance Committee tax hearings, and executive meet-

John Roosevelt Spurns Job in Advertising Firm

Boston, March 22 (AP).—John Roosevelt, youngest son of the President, today turned down an offer of employment with a New York advertising and printing firm. He said he planned to remain in Boston for at least a year after his graduation from Harvard in June. He will be married to Miss Ann Lindsay Clark in Nahant in June.

Reorganization Bill Will Pass By Tomorrow, Byrnes Predicts

Opponents of the Administration's reorganization bill yesterday threw down a steady barrage of amendments to limit the President's merger powers, but out of seven attempts they failed to win a single victory.

Confident nothing now can stop the sweeping bureau consolidation measure, Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, predicted passage by tomorrow of the measure, without change in its present form.

Stubborn foes of the bill meanwhile girded for a final skirmish today to prevent abolition of the Comptroller General's office. The Administration plan would dismantle the General Accounting Office, transfer some of its functions to the Budget Bureau, and set up an auditor general responsible to a special joint committee of Congress.

Byrnes said the amendment to continue the present set-up would be defeated by a "safe" margin. He likewise forecast defeat of a last ditch effort to send the bill back to committee for further study—a move strongly favored by President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor.

But Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, one of the staunchest foes of the measure, predicted the recommittal vote would be "close."

"The country is opposed to this measure, as is plainly shown by practically all of the correspondence being received by Senators on the subject," commented Senator Harry Flood Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia. "Nor have I seen a single editorial supporting it. We may not defeat it, but at least we are making the fight."

Yesterday's opposition efforts were concentrated on exemption of

Roosevelt Asks Compromise on Anti-Lynch Bill

Suggests U. S. Publicize Mob Violence and Let States Prosecute.

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday disclosed he had proposed to Congress a compromise for the anti-lynch bill under which G-men or legislators would investigate and publicize all acts of mob violence.

The substitute proposal, as outlined by Mr. Roosevelt at his press conference, presumably would not call for Federal prosecution of mob-members, but would serve merely to provide a full exposition of facts which he said is what the Nation needs.

The Senate repeatedly has filibustered to death the Wagner-Van Nuys lynch law which would authorize Federal prosecution of State law enforcement officers found to have been derelict in their protection of prisoners from mob violence. The President said that this situation must not be permitted to block attempts to cope with mob attacks.

He revealed he made two alternative suggestions to members of Congress:

Adoption of legislation empowering the Attorney General to investigate lynchings and other violence and to make the facts public to Congress, the President and the press.

Creation of a permanent Congressional standing committee to make the investigations and subsequent reports.

The inquiries would be restricted to attacks which ended in death. The President did not designate the Federal agents to make the investigation if this power were awarded to the Attorney General, but the G-men are the most effective agents in the Justice Department and they probably would be assigned to this task. They likewise would be made available to a standing committee of Congress if one were created for this purpose.

Spanish Embargo A Law, Says Hull

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Hull said yesterday it was impossible for President Roosevelt to revoke the United States embargo on arms to Spain as long as war continues.

In a letter to Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the Foreign Policy Association, he said prohibition of shipment of arms to Spain was mandatory upon the President by virtue of the neutrality resolution of Congress in December, 1936.

Buell had written the Secretary raising the point that the neutrality act was to be invoked only when there was a danger the United States might be drawn into a war. He questioned whether that danger still existed in the Spanish situation.

Rail Quiz Opposed By Van Sweringens

By the Associated Press.

The Senate committee investigating railroad financing developed yesterday that Van Sweringen railroads had contributed heavily to organizations headed by Milton W. Harrison, New York railroad consultant, who actively opposed the inquiry.

Chairman Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, put into the record memoranda showing that Research Associates, Inc., received $64,590 in 1931 from five Van Sweringen roads.

The contributions made were Chesapeake & Ohio, $25,000; Erie, $15,750; Nickel Plate, $6,375; Missouri Pacific, $22,215, and Texas & Pacific, $5,250. The next year some of the roads gave a total of $46,000.

42,500-ton Warcraft Reported U.S. Plan

London, March 23 (U.P.).—The Daily Express' political commentator said today that, in view of Japan's refusal to disclose her naval building plans, Great Britain and the United States have decided to build 42,500-ton battleships with 16-inch guns. Two such dreadnaughts are planned for Britain's 1938 program, he said.

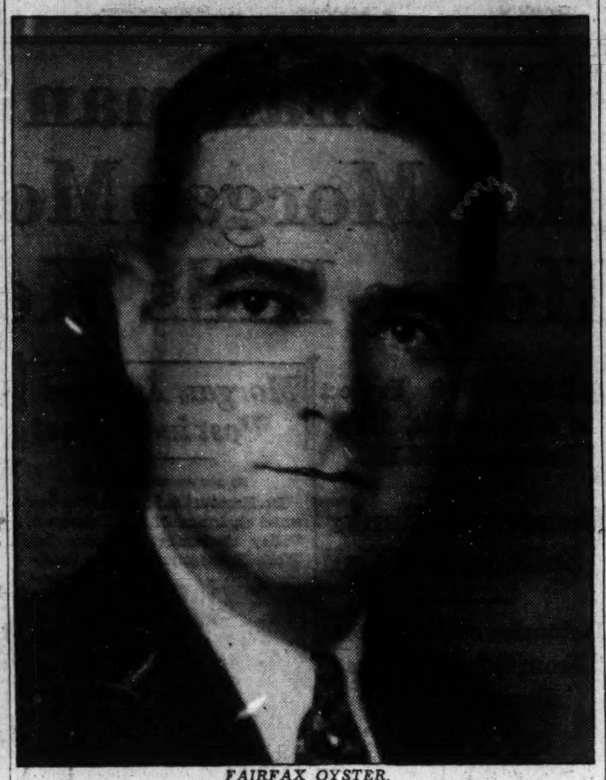
Oyster Eyes U. S. Competition With the Little Businessman



FAIRFAX OYSTER.

New Center Market Dealers' Association Head Opposes Government's 'Double Dealing' in Trying to Boost and Lower Prices.

By Christine Sadler

With the Government buying butter on the one hand, to raise the price, and encouraging co-operatives to lower it, on the other, Fairfax Oyster and the other independents who belong to the New Center Market Dealers Association sometimes wonder where their biggest competition is.

Oyster is first vice president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations, president of the New Center Market dealers, and the third-generation representative of a family which has been selling eggs, butter and cheese in Washington for 108 years. He calls himself a "little butter and egg man."

He became interested in co-operation among businessmen when the old Center Market was razed. When the new market was built the men did not want to let the organization they had founded in the razing days stop. Oyster remained the president and has continued to represent the group in the federation, which he considers an excellent clearing house for problems of small businessmen in the District.

Eyes Competition.

He keeps a close eye on Government competition as represented in the "selling which goes on in Federal buildings" and it was largely through his efforts that Secretary Morgethau decided butter selling should be stopped in the Treasury Department.

"Secretary Morgenthau started what I hope will be the doom of such sales in Federal buildings. Everything from soup to nuts, with automobile tires thrown in on the side can be bought in the buildings now," he declares.

No businessman in the District will do more than Oyster to combat a law or ruling he considers unfair. He is the man who was found guilty of violating the business privilege tax by failing to file returns promptly. He thinks his "test case" accomplished much good by calling attention to provisions of the law which the businessmen consider unjust.

He favors a sales tax, which he declares would be open and above board. "Today we have pyramiding taxes," he says. "In the District we are particularly unfortunate because we do not know how much is taken in nor where it goes."

Oyster's name is the Anglicized version of the old Dutch name "Eyster." The Fairfax, of course, is good Virginian. Horseback riding, Oyster's favorite sport, also dates back to Virginia.

"The reason horseback riding is such a nice sport," he says, "is that you can work off pounds and energy, or can just lounge along."

He was born in the District and never has voted, although he thinks District residents should have the ballot. "I think suffrage should be gradual, though, because we don't know anything about politics," he declares. As long as the residents cannot vote, he believes it is more than usual necessary for them to co-operate on their problems and voice their sentiments through organizations.

Is Blues Chaser.

Because of an illness doctors were unable to cure, Oyster left school as a youngster, determined to cure himself. He succeeded and his success left him with the philosophy that a man finds happiness and health when he begins to be more interested in others than he is in himself.

It's a philosophy that has won him innumerable friends and brought him much adventure. He always can be counted on to dispel the gloom when a friend is worried, and on three specific occasions he has been on hand in time to prevent a death. Twelve years ago he rescued a drowning man from the Tidal Basin; once he saved four women from a fire, and once he prevented a suicide.

Oyster is unmarried and lives at 612 East Capitol street. He is a member of the Reciprocity Club and much interested in the work of Opportunity House.

On Friday—George A. Ford, second vice president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations and president of the Columbia Heights Business Group, will be next in the "Working for Washington" series.

House Acts to Halt Naval Retirement

By the Associated Press.

The House Naval Committee yesterday pressed toward enactment of legislation designed to prevent the forced retirement of 1,600 Naval officers.

The committee is holding hearings designed to make radical changes in the present selection system. The legislation would give all commissioner officers passed over by the selection boards at least one more year of service and another chance for promotion.

The measure also would authorize appointment of 1,000 additional officers.

U.S. Asks Japan For $2,214,007 Panay Damage

Sum Assessed for Deaths, Inquiries and Actual Property Loss.

By the United Press.

The United States yesterday assessed the Japanese government $2,214,007.36 for deaths, personal injuries and property damage resulting when Japanese bombing planes attacked and sank the U. S. gunboat Panay in the Yangtse River last December 12.

A formal note demanding payment of that amount of indemnity and damages was delivered to the Japanese foreign office in Tokyo yesterday by American Ambassador Joseph C. Grew, upon cabled instructions from Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

The bill was in two parts. The Government asked for $268,337.35 indemnification for the three American men who were killed and personal injuries to some 40 others.

No Punitive Damages.

It asked for $1,945,670.01 for property losses sustained in the sinking of the Panay and the destruction of three Standard Oil vessels which the Panay was convoying.

In his note Grew said this Government considers the amount asked as "conservative." It included no item of punitive damages for the attack, which severely strained relations between the two countries for two weeks.

The Japanese government formally promised, in two separate notes December 14 and December 24, to pay full indemnification for personal injuries and property losses. Grew, in his note, reminded the foreign office of those promises.

The Ambassador's Note.

His note said:

"References made to the exchanges of communications between my Government and the government of Japan regarding the attack upon the U. S. S. Panay and American merchant vessels on December 12, 1937, by Japanese armed forces and to the assurances contained in your government's note dated December 14, 1937, and reaffirmed in its note of December 24, 1937, that the Japanese government would make 'indemnifications for all the losses' sustained.

"I am instructed by my Government to state that it finds (1) that the amount of property losses sustained is $1,945,670.01 and (2) that the amount of the indemnification which should be paid in the death and personal injury cases is $268,337.35. Therefore the total amount which my Government is prepared to accept is $2,214,007.36.

"These figures have been arrived at after careful consideration and represent only the actual property losses and a conservative estimate of the damages resulting from deaths and personal injuries. The amount includes no item of punitive damages."

The Gallup Poll

Boycott of Japanese Olympic Games Opposed by Majority in Survey.

By DR. GEORGE GALLUP,
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, March 22.—Although officials of the British Amateur Athletic Association last week suggested that England should refuse to participate in the 1940 Olympic games because they are to be held in Tokyo, American public sentiment is strongly against a boycott of the Olympic by the United States.

George Gallup

This fact is indicated by a Nation-wide survey conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The majority of voters reached declared that international politics should be completely divorced from the world of sports, and that a boycott in protest against Japanese aggression in China would only increase hard feelings.

Although talk of a boycott has been going on for some months, the International Olympic Committee definitely decided last week to hold the games in Tokyo. When the decision was announced, H. F. Pash, vice president of the British A. A. A., predicted that the committee would get no support from England and suggested that the British hold unofficial matches instead with countries which "still remain civilized."

The Institute survey, which covered a scientifically selected cross-section of American voters, asked:

"Do you think the United States should refuse to take part in the 1940 Olympic games if they are held in Japan?"

The vote was:

For Boycotting the Japanese Games 39%
Against Boycotting 61

The results are especially interesting because other Intitute surveys have indicated that public opinion in the United States is unsympathetic toward Japan in the present conflict in China. Clearly, however, this animosity does not extend to the realm of sports.

Once before, in 1936, the boycott issue was raised when the Olympics were held in Germany. Some groups in the United States thought American athletes should stay away in protest against Hitler's treatment of the Jews. But an Institute survey conducted at the time found that a large majority of voters were against boycotting the games.

The vote was:

For Boycotting the Games in Germany (in 1936) 43%
Against Boycotting 57

The two expressions of sentiment against Olympic boycotts will undoubtedly be a useful guide to the American Olympic Committee, which is likely to be under pressure from minority groups favoring a boycott.

Why Boycott Is Opposed.

The chief reason given by voters for opposing a boycott is that, in the words of one typical voter, "a country's politics have nothing to do with sports." Others pointed out that Japan's war is not the concern of the United States, that we should try to stay on good terms with all nations, and that boycotting the games would not be good sportsmanship.

How popular is the President today—compared with the 1936 election? Read The Gallup Poll in Sunday's Post.

4 Oil Companies Ask U. S. Help in Mexican Seizure

By the Associated Press.

Four American oil companies filed a brief with Secretary Hull yesterday, claiming a "manifest denial of justice" in Mexico, and asking the support of the United States Government.

The companies were the Huasteca Petroleum Co., Standard Oil of California, the Mexican-Sinclair Petroleum Corporation and the Penn-Mex Fuel Co.

Their properties in Mexico were expropriated by the Mexican government after a refusal by oil companies to pay additional wages awarded their employes by the Mexican labor courts.

Hull did not indicate what action he would take. He said he handed the brief to the legal section of the State Department for preliminary study.

Warrings Face Income Study By Grand Jury

20 Government Witnesses Called After Secret Investigation.

An undercover investigation of the income tax affairs of the Warring brothers, Emmett R., 32; Charles (Rags), 30, and Leo, 34, will move a step forward next week when the District grand jury begins hearing testimony of approximately 20 Government witnesses.

It was learned yesterday that the witnesses had been called before assistant District attorneys to tell what they know about the income of the Warrings and also to produce bank records and data to show the returns.

Whether others suspected of having failed to return the proper tax on their incomes will be brought into the inquiry is not known. Other names have been mentioned.

Investigation of the Warrings' incomes for the past several years had been conducted by special agents of the Internal Revenue Bureau, who have delved into bank accounts and other associated items. Just what the agents learned is not known, but they unearthed enough to warrant a grand jury investigation.

Charles Warring is in Atlanta for assaulting Joseph E. O'Brien in Southeast Washington several months ago. O'Brien and two others were convicted of perjury because they "forgot to remember" when they were called as witnesses against Warring and his four associates. O'Brien was shot through the knee and crippled for life. At the trial of the men for shooting him he could not identify any of them.

Mother of 2 Found Dead in Basement

Mrs. Grace Flinn, 41, wife of a section chief in the Bureau of Customs and mother of two young children, was found dead by her husband, Burke Flinn, in the basement garage of her home, at 3416 Patterson street northwest, last night.

Cracks under the garage doors were stuffed with paper, Flinn told police.

She was sitting against the garage door in an almost upright position, her head close to the car exhaust which poured deadly fumes from the motor. Beneath her on the floor she had spread newspapers so as not to soil the immaculate printed dress she wore.

Flinn told police his wife had become despondent over an illness of several months.

Jury Absolves Rowley In Illegal Operation

Deliberating 4 hours, a jury in District Court yesterday acquitted Frank M. Rowley of a charge of performing an illegal operation on a young woman who died.

Rowley was charged with having performed the operation in February, 1937. The woman lived for several weeks and then died in Gallinger Hospital. Tried before Justice Joseph W. Cox, Rowley protested his innocence and insisted he knew nothing about the case. Attorney T. Edward O'Connell represented Rowley.

London, March 22 (AP).—Shirley Temple, of the movies, has been awarded $10,000 in public settlement of a libel action based on an article which appeared October 28, 1937, in "Night and Day," a London journal which has since discontinued publication.

Lord Chief Justice Hewart termed the article a "gross outrage." Sir Patrick Hastings, plaintiff's counsel, refused to read the "beastly publication" in court but said it was "one of the horriblest libels one can imagine about a child 9 years of age."

35 in Washington Assured $38,000 Share in Sweepstakes

10 Ticket Holders Still Have Chance at $150,000 Grand Prize; 2 Lose Chance for Big Money When Horse Is Scratched.

Washingtonians will collect a minimum of $38,000 on Irish Sweepstakes tickets.

The draw, completed yesterday in Dublin, indicated that 17 $500 prizes had fallen to the lot of District buyers, who already had 13 winning tickets, as the result of Monday's first draw. Each of Monday's tickets is worth at least $2,300, and ten of these have a chance at $150,000.

From London, the Associated Press reported that Lord Mildmay's Davy Jones had been scratched in the Grand National, on which the sweeps are based.

This brought disappointment to Francis L. Bourne, retired business man, of 2129 Florida avenue northwest, and Peter Schaming, German war veteran, who is a waiter in the Occidental restaurant. They both held tickets and pinned rosy hopes on Davy Jones.

The retirement of Davy Jones, who was regarded as a possible winner, made the amounts of the tickets held by Bourne and Schaming worth only $2,300.

Thirty-five Washingtonians, in all, may profit out of the Sweeps. Five of the tickets are in joint ownership. Throughout the world there are 1,600 of the $500 prize winners, and 17 were here.

Washington ticket holders who have a chance for the "big money" include Philip Kousen, of 142 Carroll street southeast, Blue Shirt; Henry Lewis, of 1866 Wyoming avenue northwest and Frank E. Dopp, of the Kennedy-Warren, Colleen; Miss Lucille Barry, 4223 Third street northwest, Royal Danieli; A. M. Faulkner, 8 Watkins avenue, Chevy Chase, Field Master; William C. Aumann, 1923 I street northwest, Bellboy; Harry W. Proctor, McReynolds Apartments, Irvine; Nanny Wilson, 1925 F street northwest, Cabin Fire; John Robinson, of 1930 North Veitch street, Arlington, Red Fireman.

In the race, which is to be run Friday at Aintree, England, Blue Shirt, Colleen and Royal Daniele are conceded excellent chances.

Others who held tickets "in the money" are Mr. and Mrs. Elias C. Renn, of 3002 Twenty-fifth street northeast; Martin Cashwell, of 916 O street northwest; "Pique," of the 1500 block of Trinidad avenue northeast; Zenna Belle Kye, of 1907 Nichols avenue southeast; "See Them Run," of 2618 Woodley place northwest, and "John Wade," of 525 Eighth street southwest.

The $500 prize winners, who have nothing to worry about, included Walter Leftwich, of 14 Oxford street, Chevy Chase; E. N. Memar, of the Homer Building; John Carroll, of 115 Twelfth street southeast; Mrs. Fannie Carden, of the Dupont Circle Apartments; Miss Grace Dent, of 114 S street northwest; John E. Winslow, of 1601 Argonne place northwest; R. Wolf, of 2930 K street southeast; "Two Graces," of 2807 Connecticut avenue; "a resident," of 1126 Twenty-second street northwest, and "Cocke," of 2124 New York avenue northwest.

New York, March 22 (AP).—Joseph Gedeon, whose wife, Mary, and daughter, Veronica, an artist's model, were slain last Easter Sunday with Frank Byrnes, a lodger in the Gedeon apartment, was given a suspended sentence today for possession of a revolver in violation of the Sullivan law. Robert Irwin, a sculptor, is under indictment for the triple killing.

Women Freed But Police Will Push ViceDrive

Suspects Will Be Arrested Again if They Return to Streets, Police Say.

The 16 women released yesterday when their cases on soliciting charges were nolle prossed for lack of evidence in Police Court will be arrested again if they return to the streets, according to orders issued last night by Assistant Superintendent Bernard W. Thompson of the Metropolitan Police.

He instructed members of the newly formed "pick-up squad" to allow no let-up in their drive.

"We'll put them in jail as often as we can arrest them," he said. "Even if we can get no convictions, we can force them to pay out bond money."

Onspector Thompson expressed hope that continual arrests ultimately would drive the women out of town.

Further progress of the anti-vice drive was threatened when the cases against the women were dropped. The technical charge was vagrancy, but careful study of the present vagrancy act convinced Assistant Corporation Counsel John O'Dea that he could not bring a conviction under the law.

The act, passed in 1935 "for the suppression of prostitution in the District of Columbia," provides that anyone frequenting a house of ill fame or committing an act of fornication for hire shall be considered a vagrant and may be penalized as such.

O'Dea pointed out that he lacked evidence of the women's being "vagrants" in that sense. Although many of them previously had been held for soliciting prostitution, their records do not constitute evidence under the vagrancy act, he explained.

Search Is Spurred In Alabama When Attack Victim Dies

Montgomery, Ala., March 22 (AP). Death of Miss Eunice Ward, 48, spurred the search tonight for a colored man who attacked and robbed her and her 52-year-old sister, Lillian, and left them for dead in a thicket last Saturday.

Eunice Ward, former president of the Alabama Nurses Association, died today of multiple injuries, including a fractured skull.

Gov. Bibb Graves raised a State reward for arrest of the attacker from $400 to $1,000. Sheriff Haygood Patterson asked J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, for aid in apprehending a fugitive suspect.

Airmail Suits Set For Trial April 19

Commissioner Richard H. Ackers, of the United States Court of Claims, will begin hearings April 19 on suits of three aviation companies to recover $3,110,556 from the Government for losses allegedly suffered as a result of the cancellation of airmail contracts February 19, 1934.

In its answer, the Government charges the airlines combined fraudulently to obtain favorable contractual terms and to influence legislation.

Air carriers involved in the litigation are Pacific Air Transport, Boeing Air Transport and United Air Transport.

The suit of Kohler Aviation Corp., to recover $138,369 from the Government on similar grounds probably will be heard by the court in May.

1938 Cinderella Gets 60 Days for Stealing Clothes

This is a story about a modern Cinderella who got some clothes without benefit of fairy godmother.

Her real name is Bertha Brooks. Bertha, alias Cinderella, who is colored and lives at 2138 Eighth street northwest, appeared in Police Court yesterday on the complaint of Harry Nathaniel Pierce, colored, of 1312 Fourth street southwest.

Pierce accused her of removing clothing valued at $30 from his home last September. Bertha, charged with petit larceny, said all she took was "some ol' rags" she saw lying in his yard. She made only 12 cents on the subsequent sale of the "rags," she claimed.

A glance at the record revealed she has been in trouble before under similar circumstances. Even the arrival of her prince wouldn't have saved her from the 60-day jail sentence meted out by Judge Edward M. Curran.

War Bill Sped As French Fear Hitler Attack

'Total Mobilization' on a Few Hours' Notice Provided by Measure.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 22. — The French Chamber of Deputies speeded work today on a bill to meet what was described as the danger of a "swift, relentless" undeclared war by Nazi Germany.

Deputies dropped party differences to debate the measure, which would provide for "total mobilization" on a few hours' notice, calling every able-bodied man and woman in France for duty in the trenches or munitions factories.

During its session the Chamber passed and sent to the Senate two bills providing a total of 8,145,000,000 francs ($248,422,500) for the national defense fund.

Would Increase Loans.

One of the bills would increase Bank of France loans without interest to the treasury from 15,000,000,000 to 20,000,000,000 francs, and the second provided that 3,145,000,000 francs ($95,922,50), representing the surplus of the equalization fund, be turned over to the defense fund.

The entire sum would be part of the 15,000,000,000 francs ($457,500,000) the government has contracted to borrow for defenses in 1938.

Debate on the mobilization bill was launched with a declaration by Deputy Edmond Meillet, Radical-Socialist chairman of the army committee, that Adolf Hitler had foreseen a "rapid smashing of our country."

First discussed 16 years ago, the bill provides "equality of all by mobilization of individuals and requisition of goods." It would mobilize the entire nation in wartime and set up in peacetime an administrative organization to function during a war.

Other Provisions.

In addition the measure provides:

That the premier himself head all national defenses or delegate such power to one of his ministers.

That the government must apply the bill to cases of "manifest aggression" under provisions of France's treaties or in case of "exterior tension."

That profits be taken out of war manufactures and sales.

Those whose factories or properties were requisitioned would be given no indemnity but would be put on the government pay roll at a nominal salary.

All members of Parliament would be mobilized and the government would be moved from Paris if necessary.

Prepared for Years.

For several years the French army, air corps and navy have been maintained on a 24-hour "vigilance" against the possibility of a lightning Nazi attack without a declaration of war. This was because the general staff agreed, after the Italian conquest of Ethiopia, that the next war probably would start without a declaration.

Night watches have been maintained at all military airdromes near the German frontier, and the steel and concrete Maginot line on the German border has been manned with sentries day and night.

The navy, too, has been ready for immediate battle. Stocks of munitions, oil and food are held constantly at war levels.

Air-raid defense drills have been held weekly at all military airports and naval bases. Every Thursday noon air-raid sirens wail in a Paris check-up. Construction of air-raid shelters is under way in every city, town and hamlet throughout France.

Italy Nearly Prepared For Hitler's May Visit

Rome, March 22 (U.P.).—Prince Piero Colonna, governor of Rome, announced tonight that preparations for the visit of Adolf Hitler to Rome, Naples and Florence during the first week in May now have reached the final phase.

Construction of a new railroad station where the German chancelor will arrive practically has been completed. Hitler will be greeted at the station by Premier Mussolini and ented Rome by a new road, about 150 feet wide, which will be named Adolf Hitler avenue. Troops will flank the route.

Hull's Policies in Spanish War Called Inconsistent by Cleric

Mgr. Ready Says State Secretary Never Protested When Government Forces Slew Priests and Religious Workers.

By the Associated Press.

Mgr. Michael J. Ready, general secretary of the Catholic Welfare Conference, said tonight Secretary of State Hull was not consistent in his treatment of exenis in Spain...

The clergyman declared Hull was silent when priests were murdered, but expressed horror at the bombing of Barcelona.

Mgr. Ready's statement follows:

"Secretary of State Hull's expression of abhorrence at the hundreds of deaths in Barcelona due to air bombardment of that city reiterates this Government's honorable position in respect to a humane prosecution of war. Mr. Hull's reputation as a distinguished American statesman bears out the sincerity of his expressed grief. However, it cannot fail to emphasize in many minds Mr. Hull's complete silence when, also in Spain, not hundreds but many thousands of priests and religious were wantonly murdered.

"These killings had back of them not even the attempted justification of military exigencies; they were perpetrated on the simple basis of the victims being religious. Nor did Mr. Hull feel called upon to express horror when, nearer to our own country, in Mexico, civilians as well as religious were killed in the course of a vicious religious persecution which still persists.

"Gen. Franco in Spain asserts that Barcelona held many military objectives, such as munitions factories, and that this justified the aerial bombings. No one can be anything but deeply regretful and shocked over the fact that civilians in Barcelona have suffered death from the air, under whatever circumstances. One would, however, expect from the leading Cabinet officer of our Government somewhat more consistency in the matter of such expressions as Mr. Hull has just issued."

The formal charges against the sons of the archduke were not disclosed, but Nazis reported that Duke Ernest recently smashed a signboard bearing a swastika in the German railway office in Vienna.

[Austrian Protestantism made its peace with the Nazi regime when Dr. Kauer, president of the Austrian Evangelical Supreme Church Council, became the first church official of any state to swear an oath of loyalty to Adolf Hitler, according to the Associated Press.—Editor's note.]

Police squads continued their roundup of chiefs of Leftist semi-military organizations, particularly Socialists who played roles in the bloody "workers war" of February, 1934, that preceded the Nazi putsch of midsummer in which Chancellor Dollfuss was slain.

An official list contained the names of Gen. Theodore Koerner and Maj. Alexander Eifler, former army leaders who led Socialist workers in the February, 1934, trouble. Former Mayor Karl Seitz and former Chancellor Karl Renne also were under arrest.

A police decree today ordered everyone in Austria to turn over all firearms and ammunition before Friday. Possession after then will result in severe penalties, the announcement said.

[Sixty Nazi S. S. (Black Shirt) lifeguards today moved from posts outside Belvedere Castle, where former Chancellor Schuschnigg has been held virtual prisoner since Austria's union with Germany, to a little house within the palace grounds. The Associated Press reported Schuschnigg, who often went hiking to the palace grounds, appeared confined to the house.

All Jews, regardless of nationality, will be barred from the University of Vienna, a high university official said. Considerable agitation was reported in academic circles for continued admittance of all foreign students and for a few "selected" Jewish students whose families have exceptional war and public service records.

All Jewish professors at the University of Vienna and in other schools throughout Austria have been removed under the terms of the Nuremberg anti-Semitic laws, which provide that a person is "non-Aryan" if one grandparent is Jewish or if they are married to women classified as Jewesses.

British Refuse To Offer Haven For Refugees

Commons Rejects Bill to Aid Austrians by 210 to 142.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 22.—The British cabinet and House of Commons struggled today with defense problems thrown on the nation by Adolf Hitler's absorption of Austria.

With Czechoslovakia and Spain still major issues threatening British security, Prime Minister Chamberlain conferred with his aides for two hours in an unusual Tuesday cabinet session on his promised declaration Thursday on foreign policy.

The House of Commons worked on details of Britain's huge defense estimates. Cost of the five-year program inaugurated April 1, 1937, has been set at 1,500,000,000 pounds ($7,500,000,000), but Chamberlain declared recently the amount would have to be revised upward.

Refugee Side Refused.

A Laborite bill granting six months unrestricted immigration and British nationality to Austrian refugees was rejected by Commons, 21 to 142, but Sir Samuel Hoare, home secretary, promised liberal interpretation of the aliens' act.

Reliable sources said France virtually has abandoned hope the prime minister's foreign policy statement would pledge British military aid in defense of Czechoslovakia.

It was expected generally the prime minister would be content with a strogly worded reaffirmation of Britain's 1936 assurance she would aid France if the latter were the victim of aggression. This might be coupled with a definite statement of Britain's continued interest in central Europe.

It was doubtful how far such a mild revamping of the nation's foreign policy would satisfy Winston Churchill, Chamberlain's only rival at present for the premiership, and left wing conservatives.

Ulster Support Pledged.

Chamberlain's position, however, now seemed secure.

He was said to be confident he could frame a middle course reconciling divergent views among members of his cabinet.

At Belfast, the Northern Ireland Parliament on motion of Prime Minister Lord Craigavon pledged Ulster's unreserved support for Chamberlain's policy. Other dominions, far from the European scene, were reported to have counseled against new commitments on the part of Britain.

Foreign Minister Lord Halifax discussed the progress of Anglo-Italian talks with Count Dino Grandi, Italian minister to London, just back from a trip to Rome.

Halifax was believed also to have mentioned reports of increased German and Italian intervention in behalf of the Spanish insurgents.

Chamberlain holds the end of such intervention necessary to an agreement with Premier Mussolini.

Liechtenstein May Offer Next Coup for Hitler

Principality's Nazi Laders to Consult Berlin on Closer Ties.

Vaduz, Liechtenstein, March 22 (AP). Another anschluss for Germany may be accomplished if Nazis, who apparently are increasing in this tiny principality, get the upper hand.

A number of Nazi leaders were reported to have left Liechtenstein today to consult authorities of Adolf Hitler's realm about possibility of closer ties between the principality and Germany.

It was officially reiterated, however, that "the Liechtenstein government is determined to preserve the independence of the country."

The question of Liechtenstein's relations with Germany has become acute since Hitler's absorption of Austria, since the little state lies between Austria and Switzerland.

Liechtenstein has an area of 65 square miles and a population of a little more than 10,000, nearly all of German origin. The reigning prince is Francis I, 85 years old. Liechtenstein was virtually a dependency of Austria from 1866 to the close of the World War, when its Diet proclaimed its complete independence.

ernment. An attempt undertaken in 1926 to bring about pacification in the state by co-operating with the government and thereby safeguarding the vital rights of the Sudeten German minority has failed.

"The policy inaugurated by the government's resolution of February 18, 1937, also has failed.

"The Agrarian League as a whole will join the Sudeten German Party under Konrad Henlein's leadership. Developments of recent times require a unified policy and complete solidarity of all groups of the German minority."

Germans Are 22 Pct.

Observers believed the merger of the Agrarians and Sudetens, following the government's decision four days ago to give the 3,231,688 members of the German minority a proportionate share in local and national governmental administrations marked simply another step in Germany's "invasion from within" to gain domination.

The government's bill for "proportionate representation" by the German minorities in the government would give Henlein and the other minority leaders 22 per cent of the posts in the national administration, because Germans make up 22 per cent of Czechoslovakia's population of 14,729,536.

Midget Red State Mobilizes Huge Guerrilla Army for China

Farmers, Making Own Arms, Have Paralyzed Japanese Communications and Wiped Out Many Garrisons in North Central District.

By the Associated Press.

With the Chinese Red Army in Central Hopeh Province, March 22. —A midget Socialist state of 7,000,000 Chinese farmers is mobilizing a huge guerrilla army to fight the Japanese.

These farmers, who live in an area the size of Connecticut, are providing their own food and arms for raids which have paralyzed communication lines in North Central China.

In this miniature Red China, 200 miles behind Japanese lines and sandwiched between Japanese-held Peiping-Hankow and Tientsin-Pukow Railways, Red leaders have been active for only four months.

In that time they have directed enthusiastic mobilization of guerrillas and have set up 17 stable district governments controlling every phase of local life—all in a province theoretically in Japanese hands.

"Making Their Arms."

The Communists are making rifles, mortars and ammunition in 12 small arsenals. They also have 14 hospitals, 10 radio stations, 3,000 miles of telephone wires, 17 daily newspapers and one magazine. The state prohibits export of all foodstuffs or cotton and is entirely self-supporting except for captured war materials.

The new state's defense force is composed of 500,000 Chinese farmers. One-fourth of them have rifles, and the rest have broad swords, spears or hand grenades. Offensive power is concentrated in battalions of cavalry, each numbering 1,500, with a machine gun for each unit of 14 men.

Have Spy System.

A widespread spy system furnishes Chinese Red headquarters with reports of any Japanese garrison changes within five hours. Thirty-six Japanese garrisons averaging 30 men each already have been wiped out, asserts Gen. Yu Cheng-Tsao, former leader of Manchurian volunteers and now commander of this Rer area.

Chinese Communist forces west of the Peiping-Hankow Railway, under a separate Red headquarters, report an even greater number of successes.

Gen. Yu said:

"Our policy is to unite the landlords and peasants against Japanese imperialism, but all our troops are given three hours instruction on Lehinism daily."

Pictures of Marx and Lenin, and sometimes of Stalin, were displayed at every army headquarters alongside those of China's Chiang Kai-shek and the late Sun Yat-sen. Communist flags and those of the Kuomintang (Chiang's Nationalist Party) were flown together.

Gen. Yu said a government mandate of December, 1937, authorized the Reds to organize a "Hopeh-Chahar-Shansi border government" with a capital at Fuping, in Western Hopeh Province.

The Central Hopeh Red State is one of five small Red States established in Hopeh, Shansi, and Chahar Provinces, all subordinate to Fuping.

Chinese Raids Choke Japan's Lines to Front

Swift Attacks Behind Foe Stall Drive of Nipponese.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Wednesday), March 23.—Chinese Communist armies and guerrilla bands are choking Japanese communication lines in hit-and-run attacks throughout the vast north China war area.

Reports from north China Provinces invaded by Japanese troops indicated that swift Chinese thrusts behind the lines had stalled movement of Japanese reinforcements to the central front.

The Peiping-Hankow Railway, on which Communist attacks have centered, is the main source of supply for Japanese attacking the western fringe of the Lunghai Railway territory separating Japanese-conquered portions of north and central China.

Drive Began December 13.

Japan's two-way drive against Lunghai has been under way since Nanking fell December 13.

On the eastern edge of this front, Japanese driving south through Shantung Province met heavy resistance yesterday in a deadlocked battle along the Grand Canal.

The battlefield was only 22 miles north of Suchow, eastern nerve center of the Lunghai, where it crosses the North-South Tientsin-Pukow line.

To the west, Chinese expected a new Japanese offensive against the Lunghai between Kaifeng and Chengchow. Chinese reported heavy concentration of Japanese in southern Shansi and northern Honan provinces.

Strike at Japanese.

Based in mountainous areas away from railway lines which Japanese have conquered, the Chinese Communists have struck time and again at isolated Japanese detachments.

Kuomin (Chinese news agency) reported that ceaseless attacks of Communist troops south of Peiping have demoralized Japanese troops along the Peiping-Hankow Railway in southern Hopeh Province.

Other Communist and farmer-boy guerrilla troops have attacked Japanese garrisons at widely separated points, replenishing their stores with captured Japanese munitions. In most instances the Communist troops have made no effort to hold captured positions.

Japanese to Hold Chinese Territory

Tokyo, March 22 (AP).—Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye told the Japanese Diet today that Japan will never yield "an inch" of territory the Japanese army has occupied in China.

Observers interpreted the premier's statement, which was in answer to a question, to mean continuance of control of Japanese occupied territories through regional Chinese governments rather than annexation.

D. C. Youth Who Fled Rebels on Way to U. S.

Gibraltar, March 22 (U.P.).—Guy Wilkinson Castle, 22-year-old Washington, D. C., youth, who faced a court-martial for trying to escape from a Spanish insurgent hospital after being wounded at the front, passed through here today with his mother, Mrs. Harriet Bayne Castle, en route to Tangier. They will return from Tangier Friday to board the Conte di Savoia and return to the United States.

Castle, member of a socially prominent Washington family, left New York last June and joined the Spanish foreign legion July 8. His mother, who lives in Oxon Hill, Md., sailed for Europe early in November to visit her son.

Japanese Warn Vessels Approaching Hongkong

Tokyo, March 22 (AP).—The admiralty circularized all nations today asking that neutral shipping follow a specific route near Jack Rock when entering Hongkong harbor from the south.

Naval officers refused to say whether the request presaged a naval attack on Canton up the Pearl River from Hongkong. They said it was a measure to avoid accidents.

U. S. Army Ends China Occupation After 38 Years

Korean Chief Dies In Japanese Jail

Ahn Changcho, prominent Korean leader who has spoken in Washington on several occasions, died in a Japanese prison in Korea March 10, his friends here learned yesterday.

It is believed the 61-year-old statesman's death resulted from privations suffered during his imprisonment.

His widow and five children, all born in this country, live in Los Angeles. One son, Philip Ahn, has appeared in several American motion pictures.

Ahn visited America in 1902, 1911 and 1925. He was well-known here and abroad as lecturer, editor and founder of the Young Korean Academy and the Industrial Corporation of North America.

He was first imprisoned by the Japanese in 1907 for alleged participation in the assassination of Prnce Ito of Japan. His second arrest took place in 1932 after the Shanghai "incidents," during which six Japanese leaders were killed by Koreans.

Franco Speeds Drive, Facing Loss of Italians

By the Associated Press.

Hendaye, France, March 22.—The Spanish insurgent Aragon offensive was speeded today amid reports that British-Italian negotiations would bring withdrawal of Italian troops from Spain.

Insurgents sent word they had driven government troops from five barricaded trench lines at Valdealgorfo and resumed their drive to the sea to cut off Catalonia from the rest of government-held territory.

Madrid authorities reported a second insurgent stab at the town of Valdelgorfa was turned back. An entire company of the Italian Black Arrow troops was wiped out, the reports said.

Reports received in Madrid indicated American and Canadian soldiers of the International Brigade fighting with the government suffered heavy losses after the fall of Belchite to the insurgents March 10. Two American medical units which accompanied the brigade have not been reported since the insurgent advance.

Gen. Franco's troops today launched a heavy attack, supported by lengthy artillery and air bombardment, in the sector about 10 miles southeast of Alcaniz and 35 miles from the sea. Insurgents asserted government troops suffered 2,000 casualties in hand-to-hand fighting.

On the northwest front, in the Huesca sector, an insurgent force broke through government lines and took the village of Lierta.

In the face of reports from Rome that talks between Britain and Italy would lead to withdrawal of Italian troops, insurgent sources said Franco had passed the point in the civil war where man power was an essential factor. They insisted the main concern now was with equipment and armaments.

Conquest of the northern Spanish coast last fall wiped out one long front and released enough Spanish insurgent troops for the Aragon drive, these sources said.

Insurgent quarters admitted a large number of Franco's shock troops were lost during the winter campaign which resulted in the recapture of Teruel from government troops.

Have you a girl or boy between nine and sixteen years of age? Then read what science says about these VITAL YEARS in a child's life:

These are the years when children are playing harder—and growing faster. They need food that restores energy . . . that builds muscle. Particularly they need calcium in their diet, because calcium is necessary to build strong bones and sound teeth.

Do you know that the average diet is notoriously low in calcium? Most meals do not contain enough for a growing child!

But you don't need a special food! Pure, fresh milk is one of the richest sources of calcium. And it contains protein for muscle; carbohydrates and fat for energy and fuel. So—don't let your children stop drinking milk during these Vital Years when they need it so much.

9 to 16 is the period in a child's life when bones and teeth are doing the most developing. MILK is the richest single food in tooth- and bone-building material.

Administration Makes Last Plea For Profits Tax

Tax

ings of the group were ordered for tomorrow morning by Chairman Pat Harrison. The committee is expected to follow Harrison's leadership, repealing the undivided profits tax despite Treasury objections, and substituting a flat corporate tax.

Regardless of Treasury opposition, Magill told the group that the flat 18 per cent corporation income tax proposed by Harrison, would yield approximately $36,000,000 more in revenue next year than House profits tax proposals. He said the House provision would result in a $12,000,000 revenue loss under present law for the 1939 fiscal year while an 18 per cent flat tax would yield $24,000,000 more than the existing statute.

Yields Explained.

According to Magill, the 18 per cent flat rate would bring $1,077,000,000 into the Treasury next year, compared to a $1,041,000,000 from the House provision, and $1,053,000,000 from the present undivided profits tax.

If the flate rate were increased to 18½ per cent the revenue would increase to $1,089,000,000, and if a 19 per cent rate were imposed Treasury yields would jump to $1,100,000,000, Magill estimated.

These figures were prepared for the committee at the request of Harrison, who has proposed not only substituting a flat corporation tax to stimulate business, but a modified flat tax of 15 per cent on capital gains as well, to encourage credit movement.

Magill's estimates showed a net loss would result to the Treasury from Harrison's capital gains tax proposals. Proposed House modifications in the capital gains tax would raise a total of $57,800,000, or $1,600,000 more revenue than present law, his schedules indicated. A flat 15 per cent capital gains tax would net only $39,300,000, or $18,500,000 less than the House bill, he estimated. The flat 15 per cent levy applied to gain or loss from the sale of assets held over one year would produce $38,900,000.

Wants to Aid Business.

As Magill concluded his statement, Harrison admonished Treasury experts working with the committee to study the testimony of the scores of witnesses who have appeared in the last five days, virtually unanimous in their pleas for modification of current business levies.

"And God knows this committee wants to help business," Harrison said.

Barkley Sees Repeal.

Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, a member of Harrison's committee and an advocate of the undivided profits tax principle, took issue with the Mississippian's business aid objectives.

"I don't think the tax bill will either encourage or discourage business," Barkley told reporters. "I don't know of any tax bill that has affected business one way or another."

But Barkley said he believed the committee would recommend repeal of the undivided profits tax over his own and the President's objections.

The majority leader said he favored further modification of the capital gains tax, and would like to see more generous provision for deduction of capital losses. But a cut of from 75 to 60 per cent in the highest individual surtax brackets, as proposed by Harrison, was opposed by Barkley as "too big a jump." Barkley also expressed opposition to a broadening of the income tax base, through lowered exemptions, as suggested by Senator Robert M. La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin.

Hearings Proposed.

While the committee heard Magill outline the Treasury's position on tax policy, the Senate Agriculture Committee considered proposals for $212,000,000 in processing taxes to finance "parity" payments to farmers. The committee voted to ask the Finance Committee to conduct hearings on a processing tax amendment. Harrison already has opposed the amendment as a rider on his tax bill.

Meanwhile, Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming called on all Senators from livestock States to support his tax bill amendment for an excise tax of 3 cents a pound on canned meat. O'Mahoney, in a letter to colleagues, said there is "widespread fear" that further tariff concessions on livestock may be granted to Canada, "although meat imports have been increasing at a rapid rate."

Opposed by Hull.

The amendment is in line with the excise tax on imported pork voted by the House and now being vigorously opposed by the Administration through Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace. Undersecretary of the Treasury Magill also criticized the proposed pork levy before the Finance Committee yesterday as "undesirable" and unproductive of revenue.

Magill told the Finance Committee that consumption taxes now produce about one-third of total revenues, and the Treasury is seeking to reduce them as rapidly as revenues permit. He pointed out that consumption levies "take little account of the income or wealth of the taxpayer." He said the House "made a start" toward reducing them by eliminating some $30,000,000 in nuisance axes, but had partially offset this action by increasing liquor taxes 25 cents a gallon to raise a needed $19,000,000. Magill opposed the liquor tax increase, along with the pork excise.

Other Recommendations.

Other recommendations of the Treasury Undersecretary:

That existing exemptions from Federal income taxes, now extended to the interest on State and local bonds and to State and local official salaries, should be eliminated for the future, either by statute or constitutional amendment.

Lower tax rates for companies with small incomes than for corporations with large incomes. (The House bill exempts companies earning less than $25,000 from the undivided profits tax, substituting a flat tax graduated from 12½ to 16 per cent.)

Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

In almost every situation, a player will be doing himself no injury if he takes the time to think out his proper course. Sometimes, however, any perceptible hesitation is fatal in that it telegraphs the position of key cards to the other players. In the hand shown below, East made a good hold-up play, but the fact that he "went into a huddle" about it nullified any good results it might have had.

North, dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ J 6 ♡ Q 9 6 2 ◇ J 8 ♣ A K 10 6 3
♠ 10 8 4 ♡ A 10 5 ◇ 10 9 7 6 2 ♣ 8 5	North West East South	♠ Q 9 5 ♡ K 7 3 ◇ K 4 3 ♣ Q 7 4 2
	♠ A K 7 3 2 ♡ J 8 4 ◇ A Q 5 ♣ J 9

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	3 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

North's three heart bid was on the optimistic side but, considering his original pass, was not without logic.

West opened the diamond ten. Dummy's jack was played, East covered, and declarer won with the ace. The club jack was led and passed. East started to win the trick with his queen, then changed his mind, replaced the card in his hand and merely followed with the deuce. Declarer said "O, is that so," and promptly abandoned the club suit! At the third trick he led a low spade toward dummy's jack. East won with the queen and returned a diamond. But the cat was in the fire! Declarer found a good break in the spade suit and rattled off four spades and the ace and king of clubs which, in addition to the club trick previously stolen, and the ace-queen of diamonds, totaled nine tricks, and contract.

East's hesitation and failure to take the club queen had really been a double error. He could have taken it and, by returning a diamond, defeated the contract, since declarer never could have made more than four club tricks, two spades and two diamonds.

The hold-up play, however, would have been perfectly logical if it had been made quickly. East could not tell that West had the spade ten to help stop the suit, nor could he know the position of the heart ace. Hence, he was correct in attempting to shut out dummy's club suit. But it should not have taken him even one second to have reached his decision.

"I'll tell you the difference I have found in cigarettes!"

SAYS WILBUR SHAW

record-smashing auto racing driver to BEN E. WILBUR, radio announcer

"You're known as a great Camel smoker, Mr. Shaw. Are they really so different from other cigarettes?"

"Yes, Ben, I think that Camels are a lot different. That's why they're the racing drivers' favorite cigarette. You see, a cigarette has to have something out of the ordinary to score such a hit with fellows like us. As I always say, there are so many things that mean a great deal in smoking. One big angle that carries weight with me is that Camels agree with me! I've smoked a good many thousands of Camels in the past 10 years, so I know that from experience."

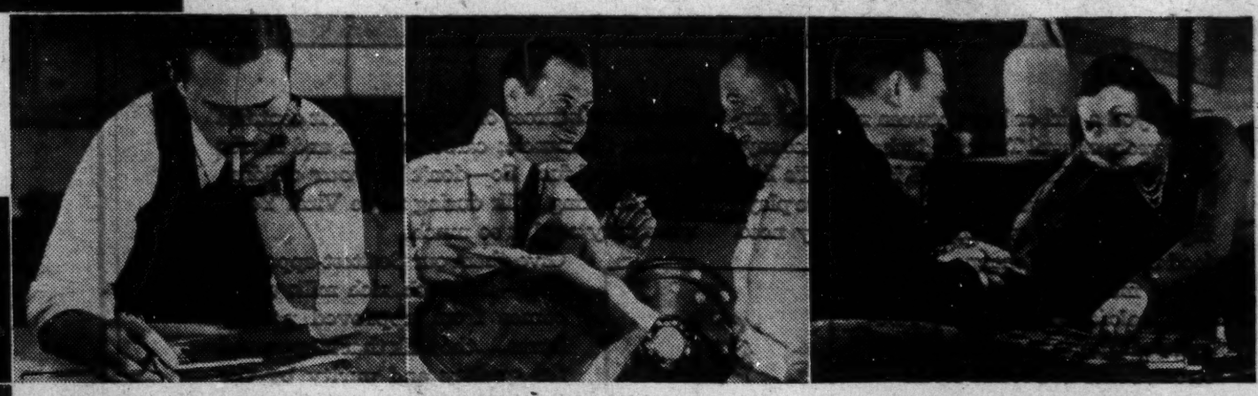
"ON THE AIR" after his victory in the 500-mile Indianapolis race, Wilbur Shaw said: "This is the happiest day of my life—outside my wedding day." Then he reached for a Camel. "I like a Camel first thing after a race," he says, and goes on to point out another difference he finds between Camels and other cigarettes. "I get a grand 'lift' with a Camel."

"Camel is the cigarette that agrees with me—the cigarette that lets me enjoy smoking to the full!"



HERE'S WILBUR SHAW "noodling" out a tough problem in automotive design. He gets in a good bit of Camel smoking, doing it. "Camel's the mild cigarette," he says, "extra gentle to my throat."

SHAW AND "COTTON" HENNING, agree on how important healthy nerves are. And Shaw says: "Think what might happen if my nerves weren't o-kay. The fact that Camels don't get on my nerves scores a big hit with me."

"IT'S YOUR MOVE, Cathleen," says Wilbur to Mrs. Shaw, his checkers partner. His own move is to light up a Camel—"for digestion's sake." "You know, a meal doesn't seem complete to me without a few Camels to help my digestion along," he says.

ONE SMOKER TELLS ANOTHER "Camels agree with me"

"Camels are preferred by the tobacco growers, who know leaf tobacco from the ground up"

according to the observation of tobacco planters themselves

"I'VE BEEN planting tobacco for 20 years," says Harry C. King, a successful grower. "Camel bought the choice lots of my last tobacco crop—paid more for my best leaf tobacco. So I know they use finer, more expensive tobaccos in Camel cigarettes. That's one mighty good reason why my cigarette is Camel."

THOMAS MIDDLETON and his twin brother James have been growing tobacco for 14 years. "The Camel people bought up my best tobacco last year," Tom Middleton says. "They have for 12 years. When anyone talks about finer, more expensive tobaccos, that means Camels to me. I smoke 'em—my brother smokes 'em—and so do most of us around here who grow and know tobacco."

"DOWN AT the tobacco warehouse they told me they'd never seen finer tobacco than my last crop," says J. E. Jenkins, veteran tobacco grower. "Camel bought all the top grades. It just shows that the Camel people make sure to get the choice lots of tobacco. I prefer Camels every time."

HENDERSON CARROLL has been growing tobacco for 18 years. "For my own smoking," he says, "I like Camels. I know the Camel buyers purchased just about every top-grade lot of tobacco at the sales I went to last year. My own crop was a dandy. And, as usual, Camel got the best of it."

guns. His examination reportedly established responsibility for the man's death.

Even the attorney who will represent the policemen at a preliminary hearing in Arlington County Police Court at 10 a. m. tomorrow, Frank Ball, former commonwealth attorney for the county, said he had been unable to learn which of the men fired the fatal shot as determined by the ballistic tests.

Nearly a dozen witnesses are expected to appear at the hearing, but Ball declined to reveal what plans he has made for the policemen's defense.

Ask Mayor to Resign.

Meanwhile, 45 persons had signed a petition last night calling for the resignation of Mayor L. P. Daniel of Falls Church. One citizen predicted that "200 names will be on the petition by tomorrow morning."

Sentiment against Daniel and the two policemen was growing rapidly last night. Citizens demanded "a person at the head of the town who will appoint more mature men to the police force who know how to handle firearms and the general public."

A Navy guard of honor fired a salute over Daugherty's grave as his widow, near collapse, was led from the cemetery on the arm of her brother, George Frazier, of Falls Church.

Several hundred persons followed the funeral procession from the Ives funeral home in Arlington. Daugherty, a former Navy enlisted man, was laid to rest as friends and relatives rallied to avenge his death.

Crowd Expected.

A large crowd is expected to attend tomorrow's hearing. A note of mystery in the case has heightened interest. Mr. and Mrs. Laurence R. Barghausen, who live across the street from Mrs. Daugherty's brother, injected the mystery angle by reporting they heard the dead man quarrel "violently" with someone in front of his brother-in-law's home a short time before the shooting.

Daugherty, according to the Barghausens' story, was heard to order an apparent intruder from the Frazier yard. When he finally drove off, investigators were told, Daugherty's car was followed by a machine without any headlights.

Policeman Scheid lives across the street from Frazier. According to the stories of other witnesses, the police car had no lights when it pulled alongside and stopped the musician's auto on the outskirts of Cherrydale.

Marvin Poole, of McLean, brother-in-law of Mrs. Cecil Rawlings and a passenger in her car when it was forced from the highway by the police car near the shooting scene, partially substantiated the officers' claim that Daugherty attempted to run them down.

Poole said he got out of the Rawlings' car to "bawl out" the motorist who had forced their machine from the road. He said he saw the machcine, later identified as the police car, pulled up in front of the Daugherty car. As the police car stopped, its lights came on, he related.

The Daugherty machine then started up, Poole said, and several shots were fired by the officers. As Poole ran toward the scene, Policeman Knox was quoted as saying: "That guy tried to run us down."

They then approached Daugherty's car where it had come to a halt against a stump in the front yard of an adjacent house. Knox opened the door and Daugherty's limp arm dropped to his side. Knox, according to Poole, exclaimed:

"My God, he's killed!"

Both officers, said Poole, declared they were trying to blow out the car's tires and did not intend to strike the man.

Authorities explained yesterday that although the policemen claimed to have been attempting an arrest because Daugherty was speeding, they were far beyond their jurisdiction of the Falls Church town proper.

Post Auto Editor Drives Test Car

With a "bon voyage" from Marvin McIntyre, secretary to the President, and Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, S. S. Grogan, automobile editor of The Post, left for Pittsburgh yesterday, driving a new 1938 Dodge sedan, on the third lap of its test trip across the country.

Various auto editors between New York and San Francisco were chosen by the Dodge division of the Chrysler Corporation to pilot the car on its fact-finding trip. The tour, scheduled to end in San Francisco April 6, was designed to test all features of the new Dodge.

Accompanied by George T. Emerson, representative of the Ruthrauff & Ryan Advertising Agency, Grogan left the city after receiving farewell handshakes at the White House. Frank Grunagle, auto editor of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, will relieve him for the lap to Cleveland. The tour started in New York Monday.

Parks officials said the blossoms had not bloomed this early since 1927, when they appeared March 20. These are the single-blossom variety. The "doubles" in East Potomac Park come out about two weks later, hence are expected to be at their prettiest around Palm Sunday.

Representatives of business, Government and the citizenry attended the meetings yesterday in the District Building, which was called by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, honorary chairman of the blossom committee. Other members are:

Commissioners Dan I. Sultan and George Allen; Parks Superintendent C. Marshall Finnan and his recreational director, Albert Clyde-Burton; Gardner Moore, William Kochenderfer, Edgar Morris, W. W. Wheeler, H. G. Hayden, Charles J. Columbus, James G. Colliflower, Richmond B. Keech, Thomas Ellis Lodge, Curtis B. Hodges and Julius Lulley.

Temperature Near Record.

Yesterday was the second hottest March 22 in Weather Bureau annals for the District. The record was set in 1907, with 90 degrees. The mercury reached its peak of 85.2 degress at 3:15. As late as 5 p. m. it stood at 83.

The previous high for 1938, established only Monday, was vanquished with plenty to spare as a blazing sun beat down from rising to setting.

Washingtonians laid aside the last remnants of winter apparel. The wearer of a topcoat was a curiosity. Children's snowsuits gave way to sunsuits.

Faced with a shortage of rooms for the 150,000 visitors expected Sunday, the Greater National Committee yesterday issued a call for 1,500 housewives to place rooms at its disposal. Prices for these rooms, the committee said, should be $1.50 a day.

Senate's Insistence On Parking Meters Stalls D. C. Funds

The Senate yesterday refused to back down on its amendment authorizing a test of parking meters in Washington. As a result, the District supply bill went back to conference.

Members of the House Roads Committee, it is understood, are dedetermined to block House acceptance of the provision.

Sway Is Extended To Crop Co-ops by U. S. Labor Board

The National Labor Relations Board last night extended its jurisdiction to agricultural co-operatives, issuing a cease and desist order against the North Whittier Heights Citrus Association, Puente, Calif.

It directed the North Whittier group, a co-operative association of 200 citrus fruit growers, to reinstate with back pay 27 packing house workers; to refrain from spying on union meetings, and to cease interfering with the rights of employes to organize for collective bargaining.

The decision was the first involving corporations organized under the California co-operative marketing associating laws.

The Navy Bill.

Enactment of the Administration's naval construction bill has been taken for granted ever since its introduction. Unquestionably a great majority of the 292 Representatives who voted for the bill, as well as the 100 who voted against it, dislike the prospective expenditure of $1,113,546,000 for new warships. But they consider it essential to national defense. And, if the situation is faced realistically, dissent from that view is extremely difficult.

It is not so much the present conditions in Europe which make this step seem essential. Nor was Japan's war on China the deciding factor. The Navy concluded that more fighting ships were necessary when it became evident that every major sea power intends to increase its naval strength. The United States is the last nation to join in this race, and is probably the most willing to call a halt when there is any reasonable prospect of establishing previous ratios of naval strength.

National defense needs are always relative. When the naval limitations agreement expired, upon renunciation by Japan, most countries took advantage of the opportunity to increase their fleets. Germany, France, Italy and Russia are still making extensive additions to their navies. Great Britain has launched a gigantic building program. And while Japan's naval construction is carried on under cover, there is good reason to believe that she is rapidly upsetting the old 5-5-3 ratio.

For the United States alone to refrain from building new ships under these conditions would be dangerously quixotic. It would leave this country in a weaker position than it has occupied for many years. Certainly this is no time to deprive the Government of the relative power to protect American rights which it has maintained throughout a far less turbulent period.

There has been a good deal of misapprehension over this $1,113,546,000 bill. It does not mean that this enormous sum will be added to next year's deficit. Instead it merely authorizes a 20 per cent increase in naval strength when Congress provides the money. Shipyard facilities would not be available to build all these ships at once. Indications are that the proposed expenditure, which is in addition to normal replacements, will be spread over a period of ten years. It is always to be hoped that a new naval conference will relieve the country of some part of this heavy burden.

To suppose that this expense could be avoided if the Administration were willing to get along with a "defensive navy" is illusory. No real distinction can be drawn between "defensive" and "offensive" fleets. In order to keep these shores free from attack the Navy must have power to strike in distant waters. A fleet designed merely to patrol the coasts in event of trouble would afford as little defensive as offensive power.

Another Hole In The Sieve?

If there were no other indications that this is an election year, the almost unanimous passage by the House of another so-called war pension bill would herald it. Organized veterans know, perhaps better than any other seekers after special privileges, that the resistance of Congress is low a few months before the primaries begin. And they seldom fail to take advantage of the fact.

Since the social security system has been set up there is no excuse for the granting of special benefits to the widows and children of men who happen to have served in the World War and to have died from other causes. Benefits of one kind or another have long since been extended beyond the group which suffered actual injuries in the war. Now the House has voted, with only one voice in opposition, further to break down the limitations on pensions.

There is something deeply ironical about the explanation that this measure was rushed to passage to forestall action upon the Gasque bill, which would provide pensions to all widows and orphans of World War veterans. Perhaps House leaders consider that a clever bit of strategy. But actually it amounts to an admission that the House is a mere tool of the veterans' lobby so far as legislation of this sort is concerned.

Legislative responsibility has sunk to a low level when leaders of the House have to resort to a stratagem to prevent that body from voting additional millions in unwarranted personal benefits during a period of depression and with the budget remaining unbalanced for the ninth consecutive year.

"A Sense Of Horror."

Secretary Hull is not exceeding his customary self-restraint when, in behalf of the American people, he voices "a sense of horror at what has taken place at Barcelona."

It is probable that nothing has done more to stimulate sentiment in this country against Gen. Franco, and to increase fear as to the future of Spain if his rebellion should be successful, than this debauch of terrorism. If, as reported, much of the bombing was done by German and Italian airplanes the crime in retrospect will seem the more heinous.

Although the Nationalist cause possesses many sincere adherents in the United States, it runs the risk of losing in esteem—even as its military power in terms of foreign airplanes, guns and tanks becomes steadily more pronounced. A year ago a poll by the Institute of Public Opinion showed a fair sample of American citizens dividing in the proportion of 65 to 35 in favor of the republican government. A month ago a similar poll showed the division 75 per cent for the republicans and 25 per cent for the insurgents. The trend against Franco, Secretary Hull intimates, has set more strongly as a result of the butchery at Barcelona.

Two wrongs can never make a right. So these outrages cannot be canceled in the pages of history by the foul brutalities which republican adherents, particularly in the early days of the rebellion, have committed against the clergy in Spain. Nor does the intervention of the Communist International in Spanish affairs provide sufficient answer to the steadily increasing intervention of Fascist Italy and Nazi Germany. The partisans, of either side, can never clear the sordid record merely by pointing to the atrocities of the other.

What does stand out, in the Spanish nightmare, is the ghastly manner in which Spain has been made a cockpit of contending forces which have little or no concern with the welfare of the Spanish people. This is not so much civil war as a bitter international combat which happens to take place on Iberian soil. For 20 months now Spain has been the unhappy arena in which ruthlessly hostile ideologies have been testing their physical powers and endeavoring to extirpate adherents of the other side by methods which make the law of the jungle seem humane.

In the ease with which these passions have torn the national unity of Spain to shreds lies the lesson of all this bloodshed for more happily situated peoples. The trend has gone so far that a man can now pose as a potential saviour of his people and at the same time order the most ruthless terrorism against civilian fellow countrymen on the other side of the lines. It is this which arouses "a sense of horror." And it is this which should also bring mankind to a sense of proportion before embittered and elemental lusts break elsewhere through the shredding veneer of civilization.

When Returns Diminish.

In a letter addressed to Chairman Harrison of the Senate Finance Committee, the Governor of New York appeals for more liberal credit allowances against the Federal estate tax on account of death duties paid to the several States. He maintains that "the States have an equal if not a superior claim to revenue from estate taxation," and hence concludes that the credit allowance should be not less than 50 per cent.

Gov. Lehman's letter is interesting and significant not so much because of its specific recommendation as because it calls attention to a very pressing need for better integration of Federal and State taxing systems. The subject has long engaged the attention of students of taxation and Congress and the Administration have given the matter some study. But there has been no actual progress toward elimination of duplicate and overlapping taxes.

Gov. Lehman deals with only one aspect of a very complicated problem and does that in a superficial way. What is needed, as the Undersecretary of the Treasury stated recently, "is the formulation of an effective plan of procedure." And that calls for a thorough-going survey, preferably, as Mr. Roswell Magill suggests, by a responsible commission with ample time to study possible alternatives and outline a program.

Conflicts between Federal and State taxing authorities could easily be avoided when governmental functions were limited and governmental running costs comparatively small. Then it was possible to segregate Federal and State sources of taxation. Of late years, with a rapid expansion of governmental functions, duplicate taxation has steadily increased and has been aggravated during the depression period, when both Federal and State governments have been forced to turn to new sources of revenue to make up for inadequate returns from existing taxes.

Various devices have been proposed to eliminate or minimize conflicts of taxation, but they are of limited efficacy. Thus, the application of Federal credits against taxes paid to the States, as in case of death duties, does not eliminate administrative duplication nor assure the allocation of fields of taxation to the authority likely to administer them most efficiently. Segregation of tax sources likewise raises new problems. If the taxes are assigned to the governments best fitted to administer them, as would be logical, there is still no assurance that the arrangement will satisfy revenue needs.

Moreover, even if some plan for co-ordinating Federal and State tax systems could be worked out, there would still remain the problem of finding enough revenue to go around. That is the danger to which Gov. Lehman points in concluding his letter to Senator Harrison. His warning has a very direct bearing upon the problem of allocating revenue returns. For if either the Federal Government, or the States, or both together, impose income and estate taxes so oppressive as to discourage accumulation, the mere elimination of duplicate taxation will not be of much help to State authorities.

Striking At The Slums.

Slum-clearance and low-cost housing projects in five cities will soon be undertaken in accord with contracts approved last week by President Roosevelt. Since these are the first of many similar projects to be authorized by the United States Housing Authority, their development will be watched with great interest.

The announcement of these projects contained a number of pleasant surprises. Only a few weeks ago the USHA indicated that most of its projects would be built on vacant land on the outskirts of cities, to avoid the high prices of land in existing slum areas. That proposal brought forth criticism from a number of sources. Now Administrator Straus announces that "more than 81 per cent of the new dwellings (in the approved projects) will be built on the sites of slums actually cleared."

Assurance is also given that "the relatively few projects that are on vacant sites involve in all cases contractual obligations on the part of the cities to eliminate an equivalent number of slums." It can truly be said, therefore, that the USHA program "is really going to destroy slums." That is unquestionably the type of program American cities want. The willingness of the USHA to adjust its aims so as to permit a direct attack upon this municipal blight augurs well for its success.

The policy now announced will naturally increase the cost of slum-clearance projects. Mr. Straus points out that the new houses to be built on vacant land involve an average land cost per dwelling of $411. This is contrasted with an average cost of $1,682 per dwelling for slum sites, including the buildings slated for demolition. But the extra expense will be thoroughly justified if it results in cleaning up insanitary eyesores.

Another promising factor is the interest which the local communities have manifested in these projects. The cities have done more than provide 10 per cent of the necessary capital in each case, as required by law. They have also agreed to contribute annual subsidies amounting, on the average, to 56 per cent of the annual Federal contributions, in order to assure the low-rental character of the new dwellings. The law requires only a 20 per cent contribution of this sort from the cities.

This response on the part of five co-operating municipalities suggests a welcome community desire to share the cost of wiping out disease-infested and crime-ridden areas. If this support becomes general a real start toward solution of America's slum problem will have been made.

One immediate effect of the program is to center attention once more upon Washington's slums, which are qualitatively among the worst in the country. The USHA has authorized a loan of $8,411,000 to New Orleans. Funds earmarked include $5,400,000 for Baltimore; $9,000,000 for Boston; $4,900,000 for Buffalo; $8,000,000 for Cincinnati and $10,000,000 for Pittsburgh. All of these cities are in the same general population class as Washington. But funds made available to the District Alley Dwelling Authority total only $865,496. It has the promise of $1,000,000 more, when Congress gets around to appropriating it.

The USHA has announced that funds will be earmarked from the entire $500,000,000 provided by the slum-clearance act even though the actual release of that sum must be spread over three years. It is desirable, therefore, to set aside, at least, the $7,000,000 requested by the ADA while ample funds are still available.

Peace And Economics.

The conference on world economic co-operation which begins a four-day session in Washington today is sponsored by 41 of the leading peace organizations of the United States, banded together in the National Peace Conference.

Among these organizations there are many and sometimes fundamental differences of opinion regarding what might broadly be called the political approach to the problem of peace and its maintenance. But substantial unanimity reigns among them as to what should be done in the economic field to ease and remove tensions that threaten to engulf the world in war.

It is with the purpose of considering the economic aspects of peace that this conference has been called. And both the subjects on the agenda and the very distinguished individuals who are to lead the discussion suggest the validity of the present meeting. At a time of darkening gloom the organizations responsible for the conference are doing a notable task in keeping alight the flame of sanity. For economic appeasement, which is the goal toward which the meeting is pointed, represents one of the major conditions which must be achieved to stabilize peace.

The Administration seems to think there's something rotten about a corporation that keeps a nest egg too long.

Savings And Security.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to David Cushman Coyle, consultant to the Senate Committee on Unemployment and Relief, it seems that all we make and foolishly save by our industry really belongs to Uncle Sam, and we are mean and undemocratic in not turning it over freely to his tax gatherers to save us from Fascism.

I may be old-fashioned, but it seems to me that to loosen up to Mr. Coyle's ideas would put Uncle Sam on the way to becoming as much of a dictator as any the world now has on exhibition.

Of course these old Jeffersonian ideas that the best government is that which governs least; that the land of a nation is the common heritage of its people, and that its communal value, as expressed in rent, is the only property right that government may justly claim, are all passe.

It hasn't occurred to our New Deal economists that failure to assert this right may largely account for our progressive accumulation of share-croppers, tenant farmers, factory slaves and armies of unemployed. ECONOMIC OLDSTER.

The Pepper-Coffee Bill.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The challenging letter of the District of Columbia Artists Union, published in The Post of March 18, compels me to answer through your columns. In the first place, I read The Post daily, especially because of its fairness. I know so many of its distinguished staff it would never occur to me that The Post was unfair, unjust, anti or pro anything, en masse.

I have read and studied the Pepper-Coffee bill and tried to see it in the light of a further development of the arts in this country. To me the bill confuses two separate issues—the continued maintenance of the WPA and the establishment of a bureau of fine arts.

No one can deny the excellent achievements of the WPA. I know in music how splendid its work has been, with its assistance to many of my personal musician friends in Boston and New York. The WPA should continue on wherever its relief work is needed, but in my humble opinion, it would be a grave mistake to establish a permanent WPA bureau as a bureau of fine arts. Each is a complete nucleus in itself and should be kept separate.

When it becomes necessary to establish a ministry of fine arts in this country, it should be a definite and separate act apart from the WPA and apart from the Pepper-Coffee bill.

"Daily Harassment."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a housewife engaged in the important daily task of shopping, and that economically, I was much interested in your recent editorial approving the plan at least to give parking meters a trial here in Washington.

I'm sure I do not know whether the parking meters will be a success here, and I'm equally sure that nobody else is qualified to speak as an expert on the subject, or will be until the meters are really tried out.

I certainly do feel, however, that since the parking meters have proved a help to distracted shoppers elsewhere, it would simply be a matter of common sense to install some here and see if they do as much for us.

I'm for anything that will help me to find a place to park while I shop, and the meters seem to be a sane and sensible approach to at least a partial solution to a problem that is a daily harassment to me and, of course, to thousands of others. MARION HOLLAND.

Thomas Of Utah.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your special columnist, Franklyn Waltman, now widens his field as omniscient expert.

The comment yesterday on political conditions in various localities includes: "Old-line Democrats of Utah who are dissatisfied with the wanderings of New Deal and the vagaries of Senator Elbert D. Thomas . . ."

"Vagaries" may have been meant as a synonym of "wandering" and a clever, forceful writer dislikes to use the same word twice. Now, if your columnist will merely make inquiry (it is futile to suggest a waste of time to read the Record), he will find that if there is a member of the Senate who in all his utterances indicates that he seems to know what he is talking about, and supports it with lucid, unambiguous explanatory reasons, that member is the same Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah.

A. F. THOMAS.

Upsetting Confidence.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If the President is sincere in his expressed desire for the restoration of recovery, I, and I believe many thousands of other citizens, cannot understand why he continues to permit high Government officials to go on making public speeches which tend to lessen business confidence.

Local newspapers March 20 gave prominence to an address made by Mr. Aubrey Williams, assistant administrator of the Works Progress Administration, assailing the alleged concentration of wealth and indicating that the poor are getting poorer and the rich richer.

Welcoming in a letter the National Conference on Works and Security, at which this address was made, the President is quoted as saying: "There is always a place in our democratic system of government for an open forum for free and untrammeled discussion of the problems which clamor for the attention of the Government."

If private individuals are willing, under the present distressing national and foreign conditions, to make speeches of the character of that made by Mr. Williams, I think that they have a perfect right to make them, but it is difficult to construe the President's quoted remarks as indicating any propriety for high Federal officials to make speeches at this particular juncture which tend to undermine public confidence and set class against class.

For several days now New Deal leaders in Congress have been endeavoring to reassure business, large and small, by promising tax-relief legislation which would restore confidence and start business moving. Such legislation will not, however, accomplish its full purpose so long as prominent New Deal officials are permitted to make inflammatory speeches. Such speeches by private individuals are unfortunate enough at this time, but from high Government officials they are, I submit, deplorable.

With further regard to the untimeliness of addresses which set class against class, there would seem to be enough in the domestic situation to discourage such addresses, but if more were necessary I would call attention to the immediate situation in Mexico, also reported in the papers of March 20, to the effect that the Mexican workers, supported by their government, have seized the foreign oil properties, value at $400,000,000, and that there is in that country, as a consequence, a "widening economic crisis."

As for the claim that the poor are getting poorer, I have nothing to say here, but the statement that the rich are getting richer is utterly absurd in view of the constant breaking up of fortunes by large public benefactions, by the high State and Federal inheritance and estate taxes and other constantly increasing local and Federal taxes, and by the frightful losses in the values of securities in the last few months.

Nazis In Brazil.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The time has arrived for a showdown with the rulers now in control of European governments, as far as the Western Hemisphere and the United States are concerned.

Adolf Hitler dares intimate action in the affairs of South American countries in behalf of the few Germans in those countries. This communication is suggested by the latest move of Hitler regarding Germans in Brazil who are evidently trying to stir up trouble down there and are endeavoring to introduce in Brazil the rule of naziism.

Hitler, in particular, and Europe, in general, should be warned in no uncertain terms that any attempt on their part to interfere in the affairs of this hemisphere, or to extend to it their systems will be resented by the United States and resisted with every resource at its command.

In other words, now is the time to proclaim anew the Monroe Doctrine, and let the world know that we mean business and are prepared to enforce respect for it.

ALEXANDER S. LANIER.
Washington, March 22.

Virginia's Highway Tragedy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I notice in your paper the report of the killing of a speeder in Virginia by two Virginia highway policemen.

To say the least the great State of Virginia should at once reorganize her police department and disarm these young fellows and put men on their force who are not so quick to pull a gun and start shooting.

It is time some motorist or motorists had a say-so in revamping the laws not only of Virginia but also of every other State. I am suggesting a few common sense ideas on improvement.

First, do away with local justice of peace officers to handle traffic cases.

Second, hire only men of proven responsibility and honesty as officers not under 30 years old.

Third, establish a system of time clocks for all officers on duty to punch. This to assure the captain that his men are on the highway at all times.

Fourth, cut down the fines of law violators so that no average citizen will ever run like his life was in danger, because of a minor traffic infraction. A READER.
Washington, March 21.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was shocked and amazed to learn of the slaying of Theodore Bion Daugherty by policemen. I knew him and his family for many years, when we lived in the same little Virginia town together.

His father was an artist and his mother a poet (they are both dead now), and Ted inherited a kind and sweet disposition from them. I never knew him to be intoxicated, and everyone loved him for his music and his comical impersonations. He was the life of many gatherings, and contributed his services free to organizations too poor to pay. He was the Daughertys' only son, and the following poem from his mother's book, "Thoughts to the Poetic Muse," reflects the opinion of Ted's thousands of friends, that he was always a good lad:

Birthday greetings
To Theodore Bion Daugherty
May 7, 1922.

"I love the gorgeous month of May,
For fond memories return.
Bringing thoughts of our baby boy,
And lessons he must learn.
May was the month that he was born,
In a home in a wood.
And there spent his baby days,
A fine little boy, and good."

The Post Impressionist

Shadow Land.

"GERTRUDE and I saw a movie," said Mrs. Trainum.

Mr. Trainum said nothing.

"There was this gangster," said Mrs. Trainum.

Mr. Trainum pulled the covers off his face. "What gangster?"

"A gangster then," said Mrs. Trainum, "and he was in love with this girl."

Mr. Trainum grunted.

"Is your back hurting again, Henry?"

"Naw."

"Well, he didn't really love her but she was rich."

"Her father was a big executive in a position of trust," Mr. Trainum supplied.

"You've seen it!" Mrs. Trainum accused.

"Naw. I haven't seen it," said Mr. Trainum

"Then how did you know?"

"It's my masculine intuition."

"Pooh. And there was this newspaperman."

"What newspaperman?"

"And this newspaperman really loved her, and he wanted to save her from the gangster," said Mr. Trainum.

"Henry, you have seen it!"

"Not this time, anyway."

"What do you mean, not this time?"

"Nothing. Forget it."

"What do you mean, forget it?"

"Well, and this newspaperman learned from a—what do you call it?" Mrs. Trainum asked.

"Stool pigeon," volunteered Mr Trainum.

"—A stool pigeon, that the gangster was going to—"

"Rob her father's firm and put the blame on him."

"Oh, her father, yes, and—say who's telling this story?"

"You are, darling."

"All right. And there was this detective."

"What detective?"

"A detective."

"And he was fat, and carried a big cigar in his mouth," said Mr. Trainum.

"You've been talking to Gertrude."

"No, I haven't seen Gertrude."

"Well what's the use of my trying to tell you about it"

"Dunno."

"I don't believe you even want to hear it."

"Of course I want to hear it, darling."

"No you don't you'd rather go to sleep."

"Unno I'n' wanna g'sleep."

"Henry! You're two-thirds asleep now."

"No'm not."

* * *

Mrs. Trainum was silent for a moment.

"Well?" said Mr. Trainum.

Mrs. Trainum was still silent.

Mr. Trainum sat up. "Aren't you going to tell me what happened?"

"I thought you weren't interested."

"I never said I wasn't interested."

"Well, you just as good as did. You went to sleep while I was talking to you."

"I didn't go to sleep! You said I did, but I didn't."

"All right, are you going to let me finish?"

"I'm waiting."

"Well, so this newspaperman set this trap for this gangster. He had a man hidden behind every door, but the detective almost gave it away. Oh, but before that the girl and the gangster had a big scene in a restaurant, a night club I mean, and, of course, she didn't know he was going to rob her father, she didn't even know how bad he was but she was trying to make him give up his bad companions. And he pulled out a gun and told her to keep her damn' little gab shut and she cried, but she stuck to him because you see she really loved him."

"And what happened?"

"That's what I'm telling you. But to make a long story short this gangster stole this money out of the safe and he got away from all these men this newspaperman had hidden in the office, but he ran after him and they had a big fight and the gangster was going to shoot the newspaperman, but he hit him on the chin and he got up and he hit him on the chin again and the third time he didn't get up. So they had a big trial and he was sent to prison."

* * *

There was another pause.

"What happened?" Mr. Trainum asked after a while.

"That's what I've just now told you," said Mrs. Trainum.

"Did the girl marry the newspaperman?"

"No, I forgot. That's what's different about this picture. The gangster promises this prison warden he'll go straight and he believes him, and the girl waits for him because you see she really loves him." TURNER ROSE.

Hot Dogs.

It has been estimated that one and a half billion individual wienies—frankfurters—hot dogs—or whatever you care to call them—are produced in the United States alone.

Among the unsung heroes of the hot dog world is Harry M. Stevens, caterer at the New York Polo Grounds who, back in 1898, when Hobson was the hero of America and Dewey was the star at Manila Bay, conceived the idea of serving steamed frankfurters in hot rolls. At about the same time, "Tad" Dorgan, the cartoonist, coined the name "hot dog."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

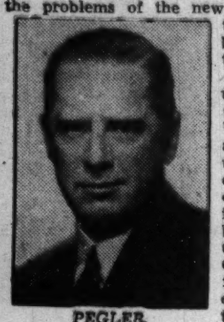
Boss Beck.

San Francisco.

IN A RADIO broadcast to Great Britain last week John L. Lewis blamed industry and the American Government for the failure of this country to meet the problems of the new depression and rebuked the statesmen for squabbling and reviling in a terribly critical time.



PEGLER.

Mr. Lewis was either uninformed or purposely evasive regarding the breakdown of commerce and a large degree of the unemployment on the Pacific Coast, where most of the labor troubles arise from jurisdictional fights between unions of his own C. I. O. and William Green's A. F. of L. and from rivalries between component unions within the two big parent organizations.

Dave Beck, senior Pacific coast vice president of the teamsters' union and late boss of Seattle, has sworn to fight Harry Bridges, West Coast director of the C. I. O., to a knockout. He has also sworn to fight the brewery workers union of his own American Federation of Labor to the same conclusion. In the course of these and other wild brawls for power, dues and large blocks of members, industry and the rank and file workmen are caught in the middle. Commerce halts and the men lose wages.

"But," says Mr. Beck, "you can't fight a war without hurting noncombatants, and I will make only one prediction—Things are going to get a lot worse before they get any better."

• • • •

MR. BECK long ruled as politico-labor boss of the Northwest, where the unions governed by strong-arm methods and businessmen were drawn into restrictive groups to regulate prices and curtail competition by a system based on Al Capone's Chicago rackets. Seattle is his stronghold, but his power there appears to have diminished by the recent defeat of his radical mayor, John F. Dore. Dore was beaten for re-election by Arthur B. Langlie, but Beck now claims to own a piece of Langlie, having thrown his support to him after Dore was eliminated in the primary. However, Langlie did not ask for this suport and has acknowledged no obligation. The C. I. O. supported Victor Myers, who lost to Langlie and therefore is definitely on the losing side.

Beck is a hard-boiled, professional labor leader. He is 43 years old, about 5 feet 10, chunky, blue-eyed, red of face and red-haired, with more than a start toward baldness. He has thick hands, no longer calloused, and thick, stout wrists. As he talks he bangs the fingers of his right hand on the palm of his left. On his visit to San Francisco last week he and Mrs. Beck lived in a suite at the St. Francis Hotel, and the drawing room was elegant with two large vases of flowers. He gets $12,500 a year and his expenses. He speaks grammatically, but his voice roars as he warms to his fights with Bridges and the brewery workers.

Beck completely denies any knowledge of dynamiting, slugging, arm-and-leg breaking and business rackets in Seattle. He claims to have no interest but the teamsters' union, and he will fight an allied union of the A. F. of L as furiously as he fights Bridges to maintain or extend his lines. He asks no odds and gives none, and when Daniel Tobin, the president of the teamsters, last week warned of leaders "drunk with power" Beck said he was sure Mr. Tobin didn't mean him. He might have meant John Lewis.

BECK DOESN'T even pretend that the employers are at fault in these fights beyond suspecting that they hope the strife will crack labor's front. In the fight to possess the brewery drivers he blames only the rival A. F. of L. union.

"The brewery workers came in and started taking the drivers," Mr. Beck bawled. "They started walking up the coast to the Northwest. They threatened to crucify the brewery industry and I stopped them. I barred California beer in the Northwest, and I went in and operated the Northwest breweries myself. I have operated every brewery up there for the last three years. But four conventions of the A. F. of L. have given me the brewery teamsters and the brewery workers are going to have to abide by law and order."

Beck's other great fight is a counter-offensive to drive Harry Bridges back from his "inland march" from the waterfront. The A. F. of L. was caught asleep and lost the longshoremen and warehousemen to Bridges and the revolutionary wing. Beck is trying to recapture the warehousemen. These cases are mere samples. The condition is general.

So union strikes against union, union pickets union, union boycotts and embargoes union. And workmen and commerce both suffer privation at the warlike whim of leaders who make only the most perfunctory pretense of democratic procedure. Mr. Lewis apparently doesn't know what goes on.

Cicero Fulpan On Civil Service

Congressman Favors System As Well As 'Privileges.'

By Louis M. Jiggitts.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Cicero Fulpan, M. C.

Petunia,
Feb. 21, 1938.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

I know you will be happy to learn that the Petunia Literary and Betterment Society and the Petunia Ladies Upward and Onward Club have decided to study the extension of civil service, and I have been made chairman of the joint committee to report at a meeting next month. Other members of the committee are Miss Primrose Potts, Mrs. Will Wobbel and Mrs. Fannie Sitz, and we want you to explain what you think you can do about it and how.

Editor Cy Skribbels, who has been trying to stir up interest in the Government, gave us a lecture. He said people here thought so little of government and that democracies like banks can't survive without interest. He warned us not to worry but that if Congress didn't stop it we might have an unfortunate depression. What do you think about it? Your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

Washington, D. C.
Feb. 23, 1938.

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
My dear Mrs. Thistle:

The Congressman is busy today interviewing several departments in the interest of two worthy constituents, but in his absence I am very glad to answer your very interesing letter and informative letter. You want to know what he is going to do about your committee. I can assure you that he will congratulate you uopn its splendid personnel, as he considers its members among his closet friends and most loyal supporters.

You also want to know what he thinks about hte present depression. He feels that a depression is unfortunate at any time, but it may prove a calamity in an election year. However, as a firend remarked the other day, the new depression is not an unmixed evil; it gives the leaders a wonderful opportunity to save the country again and make the people doubly thankful. And I am glad to report that the Congressman is definitely hopeful.

I know that the Congressman will regret to learn that the good people of Petunia think so little of the Government.

Assuring you that it is always a pleasure to serve you this way, I am, yours sincerely,

WILLA DOOLITTLE,
Secretary.

Petunia,
Feb. 26, 1938.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

The ladies are very happy that you also think so much of them, but we still want to know what you think about the civil service, too.

Mrs. Will Wobbel wants to know why you had to leave your business to go trotting all over Washington for somebody.

Editor Skribbels requested the losers in the recent poet laureate contest to contribute some more poetry and I am sending them to you as everybody here believes they are talking about you and you ought to know it. Mrs. Carmen Squalls, of Detour, contributed what she called a repeater poem from her Father Gander Rhymes for Adolescent Adults, entitled, "Woe," as follows:

Congress just talks and talks and talks
While Business balks and balks and balks,
Depression stalks and stalks and stalks
As Hunger walks and walks and walks.
They talk of this, they talk of that Until at last we're broken flat,
But soon they may discover that
The voters on them have strongly sat.

Miss Pinky Tulepp, of Morning Glory, contributed what she called poignant poesy with a point, entitled, "A Pleasant Thought," as follows:

Congress we honor, love and obey
When oft we'd like to cry out nay,
But through the gloom there shoots a ray
For every two years there comes a day
And this year, hallelujah! We have our say.

Somebody says Hezekiah Hawks, who you didn't give the Detour postoffice to, bought 40 copies to put around the district.

Hoping you will now tell us what you think about the civil service, I am, your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

Washington, D. C.
Feb.28, 1938.

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
Dear Mrs. Thistle:

I am delighted to inform you that the feasibility of extending and reforming the civil service has been receiving my most serious consideration. As you doubtless know there are provisions relative to the civil service in the Senate reorganization bill, No. 3331. I take pleasure in sending you certain reports of committee members and I am sure that you will find therein much valuable information.

I am sure you will understand that there are many ramifications to be considerded in reaching a decision on this very important matter, but I am happy to report that I am formulating a plan that will strengthen the civil service but at the same time will not encroach upon certain time-honored Congressional privileges. This plan I hope to announce in due course.

Assuring you that it has been a pleasure to elucidate on this important subject, and trusting that your study also will be successful. Yours very sincerely,

CICERO FULPAN, M. C.

March 2, 1938.
Petunia,

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

We appreciate your fine letter but Mrs. Will Wobbel says she doesn't think you made it entirely clear how you stand. She wants to know what you mean by ramifications and what Congressional privileges you mean.

We see where Congressman Snyder, of Penn., has proposed a system of superhighways. Do you think you can arrange for one or two of the roads to come through Petunia? And you haven't told us why you are forced to trot all over Washington for? Your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

Washington, D. C.
March 4, 1938.

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
My dear Mrs. Thistle:

I regret that the Congressman has found it necessary to retire with a headache today after strenuous efforts yesterday to find suitable positions for the two worthy constituents who have been coming to his office every day for the last two months. He is especially disturbed, as there is a matter upon which he wishes to vote in the House today and he has always made it a rule never to give the appearance of dodging an important vote. But in his absence I can assure you that he is not forced to trot all over Washington. He considers it a pleasure. To serve constituents is the greatest happiness in a life otherwise filled with arduous duties.

Mrs. Wobbel wants to know about the ramifications and time-honored Congressional privileges. The principal ramifications are patronage and the time-honored privileges are the right of Congressmen to appoint postmasters.

I feel sure that the Congressman will be glad to consider a superhighway for Petunia, but Detour citizens also are demanding one and he finds that it would require a considerable bend in the road to include both splendid cities. Yours sincerely,

WILLA DOOLITTLE, Sec.

Petunia.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

We are so excited over our superhighway. Mrs. Wobbel told Pete Peedler about it and he has already decided to move his Tonsorial and Confectionary Shop on it and add a hamburger emporium. When de we get it?

With the dictators raising cain Congress ought to go ahead with the defense program and quit dilly-dallying. What do you think about it?

Mrs. Wobble is still not clear on your civil service stand either. Your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

Washington, D. C.
March 10, 1938.

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
My dear Mrs. Thistle:

In the Congressman's continued absence I can assure you that if superhighways are built, the Congressman will not overlook Detour and Petunia. You may be certain that he will not hesitate to bend the road to serve his many fine constituents.

I am glad to inform you that the Congressman abhors dictatorship like a vacuum abhors air. With all his power, pomp and prestige in Washington he has never developed the slightest dictator complex. As a friend remarked recently, the Congressman is just the same old sociable, sober and simple democrat he has always been. Yours sincerely.

WILLA DOOLITTLE, Sec.

Petunia.
March 12, 1938.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

We have been studying the reports you sent us but what struck us most was that nearly a million people are working for the Government. How can Congressmen and Senators keep track of all the jobs? We decided that it would be doing you a favor to have everybody under civil service. Mrs. Wobbel said you could then have time to think about legislation besides saving yourself a lot of trotting, and Miss Potts said if they had had it before, you wouldn't be having postoffice pains now just before election time.

We also notice that some of them up there say that when bureau heads don't like Senators and Congressmen they put them on the black list and won't give them any jobs for constituents. If you had civil service they couldn't do this to you it looks like to us.

I know you will be glad to learn that we have decided to see Mayor Aufton Fitz about having civil service in Petunia. What do you think about this? And what are you going to do about the TVA? Your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

P. S. Just what is a bureau anyhow?

Washington, D. C.
March 1, 1938.

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
My dear Mrs. Thistle:

I regret that the Congressman is still having trouble with his head, but I feel sure that he will be delighted to learn of your intention to establish civil service in Petunia.

The Congressman will not take any action in TVA matters. He has remarked that this is senatorial patronage and he is having enough trouble with postoffices already.

Trusting that you will write whenever you desire any further information, I am, yours sincerely,

WILLA DOOLITTLE,
Secretary.

P. S. As the Congressman has remarked, a bureau is a Government agency that starts with a few employes and then just grows and grows and grows like Topsy, or somebody.

Petunia,
March 16, 1938.

Congressman Cicero Fulpan,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Congressman Fulpan:

We saw Mayor Fitz about the civil service in Petunia and he said he wasn't going to make anybody on the police force take civil service as he had promised all three of them their jobs before the election last summer and he wasn't going to break a promise, and besides he doubted if Night Marshall Will Knod could pass it. When Mrs. Sitz told him you favored it, he practically blew up and said tell you he'd have civil service here when you had it in the Government and he'd give up the policemen when you gave up the postmasters. So it's up to you.

If you want to please the ladies here you had better get the civil service extended up there as soon as you can. We have decided to wait and see what you do. Your faithful servant,

(MRS.) MAGNOLIA THISTLE.

P. S. How do you get rid of a bureau?

Mrs. Magnolia Thistle,
Petunia.
My dear Mrs. Thistle:

The Congressman is much better today but I am afraid that he is going to have a relapse when he hears what Mayor Fitz said.

Assuring you that this office enjoyed hearing from you. Yours sincerely,

WILLA DOOLITTLE, SEC.

P. S. You don't. As the Congressman has remarked, once a bureau always a bureau.

2 Values Added, 2 Dropped in New Series of Stamps

With issuance of the new presidential series of postage stamps approaching, the Postoffice Department announced yesterday that two values in the coming issue have been dropped and two added.

The total number of stamps, 31, remains the same; but a shift in denominations will cause Presidents Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison, McKinley and Theodore Roosevelt to appear on lower values than originally intended.

For the 35 and 40-cent stamps previously scheduled, new values of 21 and 24 cents will be substituted. The 21-cent stamp is expected to meet the need for registered letters calling for return receipts (18 cents plus 3 cents) and also for registered airmail letters (15 cents registration, 6 cents airmail). The 24-cent stamp is intended for registered airmail letters calling for return receipts. The two stamps that were dropped from the series would have been used in parcel post.

Superintendent Robert E. Fellers of the Division of Stamps said yesterday that he expected a sale next year of 25,000,000 21-cent stamps, and 3,000,000 24-cent ones.

The House-Wilson Diplomacy.

COL JENNINGS C. WISE explains much that was dark to us who were at the diplomatic front during the period of the Wilson Administrations, and does it more clearly than any of the explanatory memoirs that have appeared in the past 20 years. What we saw from the other side seemed naif in the extreme, and, with probably the highest motives, catastrophic in its effects, precipitating in fact our participation into the World War, which it seemed to be seeking to avoid, but not necessarily "sinster" in any but an accidental sense.

That connotation of evil which most of us did not see is emphasized in Col. Wise's book: Col. House is depicted in these pages "as a confessed revolutionary," as the progenitor of the disintegrating forces of the New Deal, as uninhibited as the equally mysterious Basil Zakharoff. Woodrow Wilson appears as a victim, wanting the role of world dictator for peace, but uncertain of the means; fearing the tools with which he worked—in the end, himself a tool; a man full of "old misconceptions of American origins," "unincorporated in American thought;" as contemptuous of constitutional controls as any Roosevelt. And in 40 years of acquaintance with or observation of Roosevelts I have never known one who showed the slightest understanding of constitutional government. Roosevelts might make good kings, but do not make good constitutional Presidents.

• • • •

AMATEUR DIPLOMACY is nothing new. Amateur diplomacy is part of our American folk-ways. In the past 100 years we have rarely had a Secretary of State who was not an amateur; who truly knew and understood the men and nations with whom he dealt in his conduct of international relations. And we have had too, an unnecessarily large number of diplomatic representatives who were totally ignorant of the rudiments of what is truly a profession, and, therefore, unfitted to serve the best interests of the United States.

Theoretically it is an asset that the executive ranks of our Diplomatic Service are open to competent outsiders. A closed diplomatic caste is peculiarly subject to dry rot, just as a closed military caste can easily degenerate into a dangerous militaristic oligarchy.

That asset can be turned into a liability, however, by amateurs, and even into a world tragedy by scheming amateurs; and that is what this book undertakes to portray.

• • • •

WHEN THE AMERICAN STATES in Federal union began their existence separate from the empire, men who had taken part in our rebuilding went to London or Paris as Ministers and returned to be Secretaries of State, some eventually, to pass from that office to be President. Those men knew America and Europe in a way which has not been equaled since. The parallel is important to understanding of the grandiose plan of House and Wilson for a peace dictatorship of the world, for no one in the Department nor among Wilson's diplomatic advisers did know Europe (not even Col. House) in any such sense as those older Americans did.

It is the curse of the amateur diplomat to try to outsmart somebody. The consequences of that urge, shown in this book in clear detail are appalling not only in retrospect but in actuality—among other things, in the present anti-Semitism of Nazi Germany. For, according to the author, the Zionists exerted a powerful influence in bringing Woodrow Wilson into the War and in Germany's defeat, and all Jews are now paying for it.

One does not have to be a Republican to follow the sequence traced by Col. Wise from the domestic and international intrigues of Wilson and House to our present apathy toward the crumbling of our American institutions and our ineffectiveness abroad. Nothing happened to cure those trends during the Republican interlude between Wilson and the New Deal. That Administration's abject and disgraceful fear of Japan so evident in these pages does not (for instance) help a good neighbor policy now in the Far East, nor an assertion of principles or rights. Neither is convincing against that background. American diplomacy entered backruptcy then, and has not recovered.

• • • •

ONE THING in our domestic affairs of that period, moreover, is certain. It cannot be honestly denied that the Federal Union of American Republics was taken by Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson and William Bryan out of the black-eddy in which it had rolled and wallowed like a water-logged hulk since the War Between the States and given an entirely new direction of which the New Deal and the obsolescence of the Constitution are a natural consequence. That must be considered in their evaluation as great statesmen. And for that purpose this book is valuable.

The ineffable tragedy of the whole thing lies in the conflict (pp. 565, 566) between Wilson's explanation of what he meant by "peace without victory," in which he was philosophically and prophetically right, and the equal truth that a man (or a nation) must fight to the death for principles which to him are dear and sacred.

Farms and Families

By Carroll Kilpatrick.

IN RECENT YEARS America has witnessed an active but hardly successful back-to-the-land movement. Especially since the World War have the cities become overcrowded and filled with unemployed. Nevertheless, the farm has offered no more hope than the cities, and as a practical matter many persons have preferred to fight it out in the cities rather than to submit to the rigors and uncertainties of life in the country.

Now another volume is published on the beauties and virtues of a farmer's existence. Unfortunately the volume is about as unrealistic a treatment of the problems of modern agricultural life as are many of the essays by Southern agrarians. The authors are lawyers who earn their livings in the city. Their homes are in the country and they practice farming as a hobby. They are not dependent upon the soil for the feeding and clothing of their families or for the education of their children. That is why they can write in rhapsodies of the beauties of farming.

The authors of "Fifth Avenue to Farm" do, however, discuss some pertinent facts concerning the relation between a great civilization and a prosperous agricultural community. They are concerned with the biological aspects of farm life, and it is true, as they say, that more and better children come from prosperous farm families than from the same families living under the pressure of city life. It is true, furthermore, that the demands of industry and business have drained the best manpower from the farms, leaving the culls to deplete the land and fall lower in the social and economic scale.

These facts are all generally known and admitted, and for at least a generation editors and teachers and politicans of the South have bemoaned the fact that each year many of the region's most promising youths leave for the Northern or Eastern cities, never to return. If farm life were as attractive as Messrs. Fritts and Gwinn picture it to be this exodus would not be so widespread.

The authors conclude that "unless some mode of life congenial to the instinct to breed shall come once more to enjoy highest distinction in the American society, the society will, after a few generations, cease to contain any substantial number of persons of high innate capacity for the practices of our high civilization."

We all recognize the need for a stronger agricultural society as a basis of our civilization. But it can hardly be achieved by wishful writing or by ignoring actual facts. Farm life today is not all roses; if it were there would be no need for an organized back-to-the-farm movement.

Notes.

Treasury Local 11, U. F. W. A., will hear Cedric Fowler, assistant publicity director for the C. I. O., at 8 o'clock tomorrow night in the national offices . . . His topic will be "News Behind the News" . . . Add successes: The dance sponsored by Federal Power Commission boys and girls at the Broadmoor Monday night . . . A gentleman in the National Archives comes in now to contribute an interesting article on the Archives Association, which we print in full, as follows:

Forrest R. Holdcamper is the new president of the National Archives Association. Holdcamper will serve for a period of one year, or until his successor is elected and qualified. Elected to serve with Holdcamper were Mary Upchurch, vice president; Mary Rovane, secretary, and Ralph W. Luten, treasurer. An executive committee composed of the officers and Dorothy Arbaugh, Miss Nadene Russell, Nellie Spink, James W. Cummings, jr., and Charles A. Rocheleau was also chosen. The organization holds monthly meetings which are attended by most of the 175 members.

Formed on December 4, 1935, shortly after the staff had been transferred from quarters in the Department of Justice Building to the new National Archives Building, the association has been very active in promoting recreational activities and social events.

Under the constitution which was adopted January 31, 1936, Carey Shaw became the first president. To serve with him Mary Robertson, was elected vice president; Virginia Tyng was chosen secretary and John Bornman was elected treasurer. The executive committee for the first year was composed of James D. Preston, Philip Brooks, Nelson M. Blake, Harriette Spalding and E. Page Bledsoe.

During the first year of its existence the association played a large part in the movement which led to securing group hospitalization and the formation of a credit union. Both of those organizations are now very helpful to the membership.

Nelson M. Blake, who had been a member of the first year's executive committee, was elected president in February, 1937, and has just relinquished the reins to his successor, Holdcamper.

During 1937 considerable activity was noted. The executive committee met some 20 times, and at each meeting considered problems or projects which would be helpful to the employes.

The first issue of "Archives" appeared on March 1, 1937, under the auspices of an editorial board headed by Herbert E. Angel. There have been 25 issues to appear subsequently. This publication carries items of interest to the membership and to others and has proved of considerable influence.

Several committees were very active. The social committee, of which Emmett J. Leahy was chairman, arranged for several dances which were held at the Broadmoor Hotel and planned the buffet supper at the Carleton which honored Dr. R. D. Connor and Mrs. Connor on the third anniversary of Dr. Connor's appointment as archivist.

Softball was promoted by James H. Ronald, and basketball by Arthur E. Kimberly, and in each case a team was entered in the Government League.

Chess activities were encouraged by Arthur E. Leavitt, and a number of fishing parties were arranged by Harold Hufford.

Allen F. Jones won the bowling tournament which was sponsored by Harry J. Baudu and Philip Brooks.

Much interest has been manifested in tennis ever since the organization of the association and several tournaments have been sponsored. W. R. Willoughy was the winner of the loving cup presented by the association, as winner of these events. Willoughly also won the trophy given the victor in recent table tennis matches. Vida Dent was awarded the ladies trophy. Table tennis has been sponsored by Raemey Burton.

Holdcamper has appointed four committees, the membership to serve during the year. The social committee will have Raemey A. Burton as chairman with Virginia Cooney, John Hall, William Keegan and Sylvia Stuart as members.

James Gibson heads the athletic committee as chairman. Vida V. Dent, Richard P. Drennan and Arthur E. Kimberly as members.

The finance committee, of which James C. King is chairman, is composed of Henrietta M. Canby, Caroline C. Covington and David C. Duniway.

Thomas M. Owen, jr., is chairman of the general welfare committee. Members of this committee in addition to the chairmen are John W. Bornman, Marian Flint, W. Neil Franklin and Dorothy J. Hill. This committee is charged with the responsibility of investigation of all matters into which the association is asked to participate. It makes its reports to the executive committee before final presentation to the association.

The following chairmen have also been appointed:

Bowling, Harry J. Baudu; chess, Meredith B. Colket, jr.; fishing, Harold E. Hufford; golf, Collas G. Harris; lectures, John G. Bradley; tennis, James R. Meek.

It is the plan of the athletic committee to have several softball and baseball teams in the field during the summer and undoubtedly the leagues formed will have National Archives Association teams.

The association is meeting a distinct need in the lives of the employes of the National Archives and every success is predicted for each of its many and varied activities.

Green Recharters Colorado A. F. L., C. I. O. Unions Out

Denver, March 22 (AP).—Meyer Lewis, acting for William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, revoked the charter of the Colorado Federation of Labor today, reorganized the group, and ousted Frank Hefferly as State president.

The action climaxed a controversy between Green and Hefferly over membership of C. I. O. coal unions in the Colorado federation. Hefferly also was regional head of the coal miners. A new A. F. of L. charter was issued and a new executuve board was elected with Lewis as temporary president.

By revocation of the charter the C. I. O. unions automatically were expelled and labor leaders said they probably wou'l form their own organization.

Farm Incomes Show Decline

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics estimated yesterday that farmers received $456,000,000 in February from sale of farm products and an additional $31,000,000 in Government benefit payments.

The cash income estimate compared with $603,000,000 in January and $505,000,000 in February, 1937.

The bureau said all major groups of farm commodities recorded somewhat larger than seasonal declines in income, with the income from livestock and livestock products showing the greatest drop.

Permanent Policy On Jobless Asked

In a letter to President Roosevelt, the National Conference on Work and Security yesterday said the depression and consequent unemployment "no longer can be treated as an emergency" and recommended that unemployment be treated as a permanent problem. The Government was urged to adopt a six-year program for handling the question.

The letter was presented to the President by a committee headed by Morris Watson, vice president of the American Newspaper Guild. The conference yesterday concluded a two-day meeting here.

Private industry was accused of "inability and unwillingness" to cooperate in alleviating unemployment and the Government was urged to "step in with vigor and courage to fill the gap."

The conference said special consideration should be given "to important groups among the unemployed, such as youth, middle-aged and farmers" and that the program should serve "to utilize the skills of those made unemployed." Every effort, the letter said, "should be made to get away from the pauper basis of present work and relief activities."

Morgan Ousted By Roosevelt As Head of TVA

an inquiry and had said that if it were ordered he was willing to present facts to substantiate his charges against his fellow members. This he refused to do in the inquiry conducted by the President.

Whatever Congress might do, the President decided it was his duty to remove the TVA chairman immediately. His Justice Department informed him that the Constitution vested such power in him—a power confirmed, it was asserted, by the Supreme Court in the now famous Myers case.

Text of Letter.

Mr. Roosevelt acted accordingly, sending this letter to Arthur Morgan:

As a result of the hearings had before me on March 11, 18 and 21, 1938, I regret to inform you that I feel obliged to remove, and do hereby remove, you as member and chairman of the board of the Tennessee Valley Authority. This removal is to become effective as and from March 23, 1938.

As is more fully explained in the memorandum opinion which I read at the hearing on March 21, and by the record before me, I have been impelled to remove you for the following reasons:

(a) Openly making grave and libelous charges of dishonesty and want of integrity against your fellow directors without reasonable excuse or justification.

(b) Obstructing the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

(c) Refusing to submit to the demand of the Chief Executive for the facts upon which you relied in openly making grave and libelous charges of dishonesty and want of integrity against your fellow directors and refusing to respond to questions of the Chief Executive relating to charges of obstruction made against you by your fellow directors.

I have taken note of the fact that you have not presented to me in person or in writing any reason why I should not remove you other than the statement recorded in the transcript of the proceedings before me on March 21, 1938.

A duplicate of this letter is being filed with the Secretary of State.

The President announced his action and released the text of his letter at his semiweekly press conference. He said that copies of the letter also had been sent to Harcourt Morgan and Lilienthal and that a signed copy had been filled with the Secretary of State to establish a record.

Mr. Roosevelt on Monday—at the third session of his inquiry into the TVA dissenson—indicated he intended to remove Arthur Morgan unless the latter retracted his charges against his fellow-members or resigned. He gave the TVA chairman until 2:30 p. m. yesterday, however, to present any reason why he should not be removed. Arthur Morgan refused flatly to resign, challenged the power of the President to remove him and took a train for Yellow Springs, Ohio, seat of Antioch College, which he founded.

Arriving there yesterday morning he was given an informal and noisy welcome by 100 students and faculty members. When the zero hour of 2:30 p. m. arrived he was muttering around the garden of his college, asserting he had nothing to say. Harcourt Morgan and Lilienthal appeared at the White House shortly after 2 o'clock, were closeted with the President for a brief period and then left, declining to make any statement. Lilienthal said he might take a vacation for a few days after today. Then came the announcement of the President's action at 4 p. m.

Lawyers said Arthur Morgan could test the President's authority in one of two methods. One would be to sue in the Court of Claims for his salary. This would raise the question of the President's authority to remove him—a question which, almost certainly, would be submitted to the Supreme Court for an answer. Even if the court did not submit the question, Morgan could appeal an adverse ruling. The other method would be to seek a court order to compel the other two TVA members to permit Morgan to sit with them and to give him access to the offices and records of the agency.

Mr. Roosevelt's authority to remove the TVA chairman, it was explained in an authoritative quarter, was based on the implications flowing from the Constitutional provision that "the executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America" and his constitutional mandate that "he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed." In the Myers case, involving the ouster of a Portland (Oreg.) postmaster removed by Woodrow Wilson, the authority of the President to remove executive officers was upheld.

It is the Government's contention that the Presidential authority, as outlined in the Myers case, applies to members of the TVA, who are executive officers for the reason, if no other, that the Supreme Court already has upheld the authority of the Federal Government to construct Wilson Dam, part of the TVA, as an exercise of the war power. The President, it is pointed out, is charged particularly with the national defense of the country and is commander in chief of the Army and Navy.

Humphrey Case Recalled.

These facts are cited in substantiation of the contention that a director of the TVA does not fall within the class of Federal appointees exempted from the effect of the Myers decision by the more recent opinion in the case of William E. Humphrey, removed by President Roosevelt from the Federal Trade Commission. In that decision the court denied unanimously the right of the President to remove from office a member of a quasi-judicial or quasi-legislative agency contrary to the provision of the law creating such agencies.

In the Morgan case it is argued by those who doubt the removal power of the President that the TVA act specifies that the President may remove any director requiring a political test or qualification for employment or promotion, and specifies that the directors may be removed by concurrent resolution of House and Senate. It is argued that when Congress makes such a specification it excludes any other method of procedure. The Administration's view is that these provisions of the law are not exclusive, but merely supplement the power of the President to remove any executive officer.

At all events, it appears only the Supreme Court can settle the legal questions involved. Incidentally, it is significant that the decision overruling the President's removal of Humphrey was unanimous and that seven of the nine justices concurring in that opinion remain on the court and that the late Oliver Wendell Holmes and Justices Louis D. Brandies and James G. McReynolds dissented from the opinion in the Myers case, which was written by the late Chief Justice William Howard Taft. Since that time Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes and Justices Owen J. Roberts, Benjamin N. Cardozo, Hugho L. Black and Stanley Reed have ascended to the Supreme Court bench.

Goebbels Asserts Germans Stand on Wilson Principles

Berlin, March 22 (AP).—Paul Joseph Goebbels, as chief Nazi propagandist for the Reichstag elections and the Austrian plebiscite April 10, fired the first shot tonight addressing a big audience in Berlin's Sports Palace.

"Greater Germany is today a reality which neither Paris nor London, Moscow nor Geneva can shake," he declared. "We don't talk of what we intend to do—we go ahead and do it."

Goebbels asserted that scarcely two months ago a "Jewish grand offensive against Germany" was launched abroad in which "the world was asked to believe Germany had been turned into a vast lunatic asylum or prison . . ."

"After all, we stand here on President Wilson's principles," he declared. "It was he who insisted on the independence of peoples, but he forgot all about it later."

Reorganization Is Expected to Pass Tomorrow

Offices

specific bureaus from mergers or transfers. But so-called pet agencies already had been informally "assured" of Administration exemption, and the opposition lost on every count.

But the voting was so close on two of the amendments that two "ties" were recorded. A proposal by Clark to exempt the Veterans' Administration received a 41 to 41 vote. Clark quickly altered the amendment to exempt "functions" of the Veterans' Administration, and here the vote tied again, 38 to 38. Under Senate rules, an amendment is defeated on a tie.

A futile effort to recoup this last loss was made by the opposition. Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, who failed to vote on the last Clark proposal, moved for reconsideration of the ballot. Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley, fighting side by side with Byrnes for the bill, moved to table the King motion. Again Administration forces won and the King motion was tabled, 38 to 36.

The tie vote on the first Clark amendment was likewise challenged by the opposition. But a recapitulation, at the request of Senate Hiram Johnson (Republican), of California, established 41 to 41 as the accurate count.

Chief upset of the day came in the Senate's refusal to specifically exempt the Forest Service in the Agriculture Department from a possible shift to the Interior Department. Administration leaders, fearful that a possible change in this single agency might endanger approval of the entire bill, had privately "assured" Senators that it would not be touched.

But when Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, yesterday sought to write the exemption "assurance" into law, the Senate defeated his amendment, 50 to 33. Even Byrnes on the night previous had conceded the amendment would be adopted if offered. It was the first vote of the day, and in effect it spelled defeat for all of the opposition amendments that followed.

Most overwhelmingly crushed was an amendment apparently facetiously offered by Senator Clark paraphrasing the Administration's request for six administrative assistants for the President. The Clark amendment would have literally provided that the six have "a passion for anonymity." Senators laughed when it was read, then defeated it, 63 to 10.

The six so-called "passionate anonyms" have been the butt of Capitol jests ever since they were proposed, but the House already has approved the White House assistants, and the Senate solemnly complied yesterday.

Senator Byrd followed with an amendment requiring the President to estimate the net amount of savings or losses under each merger order sent to Congress. It was a supplement to the Virginian's unsuccessful proposal Monday to effect 10 per cent reduction in Federal spending, and it met the same fate. This amendment was defeated 38 to 29.

Last of the long line of amendments by Senator Clark was a proposal to exempt the Bureau of Biological Survey from transfer from the Agriculture Department. It was rejected, 42 to 20, giving the Administration a clean sweep of seven victories for the day.

Denies Narcotic Charge.

New York, March 22 (AP).—Benny Greengrass, described by the Federal Bureau of Investigation as head of a $1,000,000 smuggling ring, pleaded innocent to a narcotics' sale charge today and was held in $50,000 bail by Federal Judge John C. Knox. Greengrass was arrested last week in Los Angeles by Federal agents.

450-Pound Woman Becomes Mother Of 8-Lb. Twin Boys

Yakima, Wash., March 22 (AP).—Eight-pound twin boys were born today to Mrs. W. C. Jones, 24, who weighs 450 pounds. Her husband is 61 and of average weight. Dr. D. A. Unsell said Mrs. Jones has a 5-year-old daughter who weight 150 pounds.

Lynnfield, Mass., March 22 (AP).—Six years ago, when a maternity nurse said "twins" to Terrence Gibbons, he was unprepared and showed it.

Last night Gibbons beat the nurse to it. "Twins?" he said. The nurse nodded.

The new arrivals were the fourth set of twins born to his 31-year-old wife, Evelyn, in six years. The boy and girl born last night brought the Gibbons' family to nine. Their first-born, now a boy of 7, was not a twin.

Pro-Spanish Group Answers Thorning

The American Friends of Spanish Democracy yesterday contested Dr. Joseph T. Thorning's statement that "I claim to be a spokesman for no one but myself as well as for what I personally witnessed in Spain."

Dr. Thorning, professor at Mount St. Mary's College, discussed the Spanish question in a radio address Friday. Two days later the Friends released an open letter to the Catholic clergy of the United States, denouncing the attitude taken by a Catholic "spokesman."

The "spokesman" later was identified as Dr. Thorning, who subsequently explained in a statement to The Post that he does not speak for the Catholic Church.

In a telegram to The Post yesterday, the executives of the Friends said, "As to his (Dr. Thorning's) denial that he claimed to be spokesman for the Catholic Church, let us refer you to Columbia Broadcasting's introduction of him on the radio last Friday night:

"'Catholic circles have requested time for a speaker to present a different viewpoint. Consequently, at their suggestion, Dr. Joseph T. Thorning * * * will speak to you at this time.'"

Russian Imports From U. S. Grow

Moscow, March 22 (AP).—A large increase in Soviet imports from the United Staes and a comparatively small increase in Russian exports to the United States were shown by Soviet trade returns for 1937, published today.

They showed Russia bought American goods valued at 244,305,000 rubles, an increase over 1936 of 35,280,000 rubles, or $7,056,000 (at the official rate of 20 cents to the ruble.)

Russian exports to the United States were 134,412,000 rubles, an increase of 4,321,000 rubles.

House Rejects 'Key' TVA Dam By 186 to 157

TVA

resentatives Richard B. Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts; Robert L. Bacon, of New York, and J. William Ditter, of Pennsylvania, all Republicans, blasted at the appropriation. Bacon slapped at the heart of the matter when he said:

"Army engineers told us that Los Angeles would have severely damaging floods if flood control measures were not undertaken. The same in New England and in other sections. We have taken no action to prevent recurrence of those disasters that lay waste great sections.

"Yet here we are asked to commit ourselves to the sum of $112,000,000 for one dam on one river—on one river where there are already three dams built and four under construction. It's time to stop, look and listen."

But it was the dramatic speech of "Judge" Joseph J. Mansfield (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, that did most to kill the chances of Gilbertsville for the present.

The grizzled veteran, crippled in the legs for a number of years, rolled his wheel chair to the well of the House to strike at the navigation arguments for the dam. (It is Mansfield's committee that has locked up since last session the Norris bill setting up seven regional agencies similar to the TVA throughout the country.)

Mansfield said:

"When you build this Gilbertsville dam, you may have a power dam, you might possibly have a flood control dam, but take it from me, you destroy navigation on that river."

"Barges cannot navigate the lake that would be there. Every engineer I've talked to has said so. It would be too hazardous.

"What's more, if it's for flood control, then that huge reservoir must be kept practically vacant to hold the flood waters. That, too, would destroy navigation. The only logical thing to do is to hold this up until we try out our theories of low dams."

Majority Leader Sam Rayburn, of Texas, then took the floor in a last-minute effort to stem the tide, but the old "Judge's" speech and the pleas of the sectionalists already had taken effect.

Rep. Scott to Broadcast.

Representative Byron Scott (Democrat), of California, will speak over the Columbia Broadcasting System tonight at 10:45 on "America's Role in the Spanish Crisis." His address will be sponsored by the Medical Bureau and North American Committee to aid Spanish Democracy.

THE WILKEN FAMILY
BLENDED WHISKEY—IT'S OUR FAMILY'S WHISKEY, NEIGHBOR!

Grandpa Wilken and Pa were great ones for home-made jam!
Many's the time when I was a kid, I used to hang around nearby watching them two eating their lunch outside the plant. And I can almost see them now, licking up that last little bit of jam and every last crumb of pie. I don't mean to say they were always thinking of their stomach, but they sure did love home cooking all right! Harry E. Wilken

There's a certain tastiness you only get in a real old style family recipe!

I guess a real old style family recipe hits everybody as being just the tastiest thing there is in the world when all is said and done. And that don't seem really strange at all when you consider all the personal looking after and care you put into a special family recipe of your own making.

I know that's how it is with this whiskey recipe us Wilkens are putting up. Some folks have told us that they can always tell it's Wilken Family Whiskey they're drinking by that extra tastiness it's always got. Well that's what comes out of our family sticking to whiskey making all these years. Grandpa, Pa and us have sure been at it long enough to turn out something pretty special all right. I recommend it to you as being something you'll be mighty happy with!

Two Britishers FindHollywood Puzzling Town

One Dazzled by His Luck the Other Perturbed by His Roles.

By the United Press.

Hollywood, March 22.—A pair of bewildered Britishers were having their own troubles in Hollywood today. One was a sailor off the Queen Mary, hired as a movie technical expert, and still feeling a little dazed.

The other was an actor who had, in spite of himself, lost his London accent and hence was having difficulty finding roles in which to star.

The sailor was 21-year-old, red-headed, slightly embarrassed and thoroughly dazed Edward Stacy, fresh off H. M. S. Queen Mary, after six years at sea. M. G. M. brought him here to act as nautical instructor for Freddie Bartholomew and Mickey Rooney in a forthcoming movie entitled "Lord Jeff."

"I never have seen so many pretty ladies," Stacy said.

The actor was Louis Hayward, British citizen, Broadway stage player, and Hollywood leading man, who talks so much like an American after three years here that producers of pictures featuring British characters now pass him up.

"They've even given me gangster parts," Hayward said.

Two weeks ago Stacy was swabbing decks on the Queen Mary and thinking about his girl back in Southampton. How he got to Hollywood is one of those strange stories that don't seem real.

M. G. M.'s picture was written to tell of the life in the Barnardo Homes, of which there are 121 in England. They were founded by the late Dr. Thomas John Barnardo, to provide refuge for orphans and to train them in useful trades. One of the most important of the schools prepares boys for service in the British merchant marine.

Was Smartest Student.

When the studio decided upon making the picture it appealed to Wallace Ford for advice. Ford is one of America's leading actors, now playing in New York in "Of Mice and Men," and a graduate of the Barnardo Nautical Home.

Ford remembered that Stacy was one of the brightest of his schoolmates. There followed a few cablegrams from Hollywood and Stacy was heading west from New York under a leave of absence on the longest train ride he ever had.

After scoring brilliantly with Lunt and Fontanne in "Point Valaine" several seasons ago on the New York stage, he immediately was offered a Hollywood contract. He played in such films as "The Flame Within," "Anthony Adverse" and "The Woman I Love."

"And gradually," he said, "I began to lose my British accent. At first I thought this was a good thing, but I have discovered lately that my accent was an asset.

"They're giving the British parts these days to young Americans who have acquired British accents, and they're passing me by. I look like an American and I talk like one, but I'm not going to become one legally.

"I'm going to keep my British nationality. And I don't know how long I'll be here. I'm afraid that almost any old day now I'll be called home to carry a gun."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey presents Kirsten Flagstad in a song recital Tuesday night in Constitution Hall with Edwin McArthur as assisting artist and accompanist. Program: "Ah, perfido" (Beethoven), "Von ewiger Liebe," "O wuesst ich doch den Weg zurueck," "So willst du des Armen" (Brahms), "Allerseelen," "Ich trage meine Minne," "Caecilie" (Strauss), "Der gynger en baad," "En svane," "Og jeg vil ha en hjertenskjaer," "Med en primulaveris," "Tak for dit radd" (Grieg), "Allmaecht'ge Jungfrau" and "Dich, teure Halle" from "Tannhaeuser" (Wagner).

From a crowded auditorium Kirsten Flagstad was greeted by an ovational welcome as she came upon the stage last evening in Constitution Hall, and her response was as glorious in song as it was unaffectedly grateful in spirit. A more thrilling declamation of Beethoven's dramatic scena, "Ah, perfido," it has not been my good fortune to hear for many a season, and the cause of its emotional cogency was the utter honesty of the singer's artistic conscience. For in this great soprano we have an admirable exemplar of the truth that sincerity is the essential principle in great and vital artistry.

The scena itself is a splendid piece of vocal writing and an indication of what a powerful operatic composer Beethoven could have become if he could always have curbed himself so obediently to the limitations of a text. He subdued his rugged strength to complement the plastic flow of the Italian language, without losing the energetic freshness of his individuality. And it was just this union of power and suavity that characterized Mme. Flagstad's reading.

In the half-dozen lieder by Brahms and Richard Strauss there were many moments of supreme enjoyment for the auditor. Not that every tone in the singer's voice was of uniform beauty, or that every phrase was impeccably turned, but these minutiae of technique were of minor import in comparison with the stimulating potency of her interpretations. It is quite evident that for Mme. Flagstad a song is not a vehicle for ostentation, but an expression of emotion, and what she is singing she is living in imagination.

Thanks to the addition of "Jeg esker dig" as an extra number, her group of lyrics by Grieg was of equal length with the German selections, though one would gladly have heard more of them. For the composer could not have asked for a better exponent of his songs than this eloquent countrywoman of his, one more versed in poetic persuasiveness or more intense in moods. Even the two Wagnerian arias which closed the program did not dim the radiance of the heartfelt singing which had preceded them.

Edwin McArthur's memorized accompaniments had their part in one's pleasure because they were so sympathetically adjusted. His group of soli—Tausig's transcription of Bach's toccata and fuge in D minor, Chopin's G major nocture, and Dohnanyi's elaboration of the waltz from Delibes' "Naila"—deserved the applause received, but one wonders how many of the auditors were impatient with this interruption.

Nelson B. Bell About The Showshops

J. J. Shubert Has Visions of Local 'Jones Beach,' If Proper Site for Summer Venture Can Be Found

Senior Member of Famous Producing Firm Also Knows What Ails Theater—if Anything; Pulitzer Prize-Winner Here Two Weeks; the Pipe Organ Comes to Life, Briefly; Mr. Muto Picks a Cinch.

"THE legitimate theater is not dead, nor is it dying; it has been here a long time now and will be here for a long time to come. The public demands it."

That is the statement made to this column in a pleasant half-hour's chat before the first curtain on "You Never Know," at the National Theater Monday night, by a man who should know—a graying man, standing only a little over five feet in height, whose stature completely belies his courage, his vision and his ability as a "battler," who, with his brothers, Sam and Lee, was able to hew his way to a pre-eminent position in the theater by breaking the virtual monopoly exercised three or four decades ago by the "syndicate," controlled by Klaw and Erlanger, who, to all intents and purposes, were the theater in America by virtue of their dominance in the field of touring attractions, bookings and ownership of valuable theatrical properties strung across the length and breadth of the land.

BELL.

The speaker was J. J. Shubert, senior member of "The Shuberts" since the demise of his brother Sam, and father of John Shubert, producer of "You Never Know."

"Whatever ills have befallen the theater," continued Mr. Shubert, "are more its own fault than that of any of the allegedly violently competing interests that are popularly supposed to have brought about the present decline of the 'legitimate.' The motion pictures are a thing unto themselves. The living theater can not hope to compete with them in 'writing off' even an inferior production. They can 'break' a production in every important city on the globe on the same date and 'turn over' their investment overnight. We cannot do that. But that is not the major ill of the theater.

"The source of most of our worries springs from the fact that the producing managers in America never have been able to combine in a unified front to enter the field of collective bargaining with every other branch of the profession with which they are primarily concerned. The Actors' Equity Association, the unions of stage hands, electricians, carpenters, musicians and every other craft vitally associated with the production of stage plays and musicals are closely organized and able to impose their demands upon the unorganized producers. Costs have soared as a result of this lopsided setup of the theatrical business. It is our own fault."

This is not far from the truth.

Asked whether he had any immediate plans for a revival of the Belasco Theater as an outlet for touring attractions of the first rank, Mr. Shubert expressed a bit of altruism. Washington, he conceded, is one of the foremost theatrical cities, outside of New York, able to maintain a season of approximately 30 weeks in the face of any depression. This is possible only by the concentration of all available bookings in a single house. He has no desire to impair this pre-eminent standing of the National Capital by dividing bookings between two houses, both of which would suffer by a halving of "road" attractions.

Then there is the matter of that recurrent Governmental option that always threatens to annex the Belasco to the Treasury Annex that adjoins it, but never quite comes off.

Instead of reviving the Belasco as a "legitimate" house, Mr. Shubert would prefer to obtain other outlets for his fancy. For example, if he could secure official sanction for the utilization of the Watergate site, once used for symphony concerts, he would like to establish here something comparable to his Jones Beach summer activities in New York. That would be the presentation of revived musical comedies, operettas and operas, at popular prices, with casts and ensembles ranging upward from 150 participants.

If the Watergate idea connot be successfully consummated, Mr. Shubert would be interested in Griffith Stadium or the Laurel racetrack as the scene of his ambitious visionings.

Here's hoping.

The senior Shubert also has some very cogent notions with regard to the critical attitude of the newspaper fraternity toward the living theater. He deems Washington and Boston foremost in their sympathetic appraisals of the purposes and aspirations of those who hope to keep the theater alive and thriving in America. The New York "death watch" he views with some trepidation. They are a clannish band, who play their favorites and search always for the devastating "wisecrack" that may spell doom for any theatrical production that does not measure up to their own preconceived ideas of complete artistry and integrity. That has been proved more than once to be a fatal point of view in the case of productions that deserved to survive, but didn't. It is Mr. Shubert's opinion that 95 per cent of newspaper readers believe what they read in their favorite journals. That is fine, provided the newsprints say the right things. Too often they don't—but not in Washington, Mr. Shubert graciously adds.

With mail orders pouring in in unprecedented volume, the engagement of "You Can't Take It With You," the George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart comedy, opening in the National Theater next Monday night, has been extended to two weeks. The Pulitzer Prize-winning play of last year will be on view locally through Saturday, April 9.

The box-office sale of seats for this fortnight's engagement will open at the National tomorrow. There will be available to Washington theatergoers by this arrangement a complete range of seat locations in all price scales, especially since an extra Sunday night performance has been scheduled for April 3.

The company to be seen in "You Can't Take It With You" at the National is the one that presented the comedy for a year's run in Chicago.

The triple-manual, Wurlitzer pipe-organ in the Earle Theater is being heard again this week, Tommy Dorsey's stage orchestra having supplanted the theater's house orchestra for the week. It is nice to hear the dulcet tones of this instrument again—particularly since it is presided over by Nell Paxton, for many seasons one of the ace organists on the old Crandall circuit in Washington. Mrs. Paxton for years was associated with Milton Davis as organist at Crandall's Metropolitan and always has ranked as one of the Capital's most efficient artistes at the console. These occasional recrudescences of organ music in the local theaters brings to mind again that many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of first-grade instruments are going to waste in the downtown and residential theaters. The pipe-organ, one is led to suspect, is deemed obsolete by the theater managers. That is an unfortunate stigma to be placed upon the most majestic and most completely self-sufficient instrument of rich harmony and variegated effect known to the musical world—as Mrs. Paxton is proving once again at the Earle this week.

Movement seems to be one of the prerequisites of the motion pictures. Mr. Anthony Muto, that stalwart trencherman long associated with the Will H. Hays organization in Washington, is the latest contributor to the industry's mutations.

Mr. Muto recently has accepted appointment to the chair of public relations in the organization of a meager group of artisans whose name has been abbreviated into The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. All this is known to the trade as the IATSE or just plain, boiled-down IA.

The IATSE, it seems, is 68 years old, one of the oldest labor organizations in America, and will hold its thirty-fourth biennial convention in Cleveland, Ohio, on June 6. It boasts some 50,000 members who are cameramen, stagehands, projectionists, studio mechanics, laboratory technicians, sound technicians, sound servicers, costumers, makeup artists, film exchange employes and theater employes.

Outside of these few lines of activity, Mr. Muto will have practically nothing to do. My congratulations to him for having snared himself so soft a berth!

Voice-from-the-Sidelines Note.

Now I know where they got the title of "You Never Know" for the musical at the National this week. You never know what Lupe Velez is going to do next!

The Voice With the Smile Won!

virtually unknown until she scored a personal hit with Edward G. Robinson and Wayne Morris in "Kid Galahad," now is looked upon as one of the most promising young actresses appearing before the cameras and microphones. She is importantly cast in the Warner Brothers production of "A Slight Case of Murder," in which Mr. Robinson again is the star, opening a repeat downtown engagement at the Metropolitan Theater on Friday of this week.

In Hollywood

With HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Calif., March 22.

Did I go to a party? Ida Koverman, assistant to Louis B. Mayer, and getter-together of the Republican women who helped give Herbie Hoover the White House on a silver platter, gave the shindig for me at her beach house during a small hurricane.

HEDDA HOPPER.

She had a couple of tent men holding canvas over our heads the whole evening, the patio being refurnished to resemble a barnyard. There was a buzz saw—I was afraid once or twice I'd get caught in it—a town pump and a stuffed white hen sitting among the geraniums.

The invitation list looked like a female Who's Who. Judges, lawyers, doctors—and writers. A terrifying list. So when Frances Marion, novelist and head scenario writer; Shopie Tucker, Mayme Ober Peak, Southern belle and screen writer, asked me to drive them to the party in my Ford, I was flattered. But Soph was nervous and made me cut down my cannonball streamliner to 25 miles an hour. I thought I was doing a slow walk. I might add, the only one who came home with me was Frances Marion.

Big-hearted Sophie told of her plans for a trip to South Africa a year hence. Did you know Sophie came out of a Poston bean pot? I didn't. She still hangs on to the old family mansion in Hartford, Conn., where she declares she'll spend her old age. Old age! My eye, she'll be teaching the coming generation how to put heart in a song when she's 90.

When we reached Ida's house, the sign over the gate read: "No cats allowed here," which all but turned my car automatically in the direction of home! But when I took a second look, there was the old wood pile, holding huge buttons with your name and a hen sittin' on it—a throwback to Ida's campaigning days, when you had a name instead of a number.

When I finally got through the gate, a placard read: "Isn't Hedda's hat awful!" And there was I wearing my spring bonnet with hydrangea trees growing from it.

Ida was dressed as a combination Little Eva and Rebecca, with blonde curls, sunbonnet and all. But before you could bat an eye, Hymie Fink, our candid camera fiend who crawls through knotholes, was wearing Ida's curls, bonnet and Joan Crawford on his breast—her pin, not Joan.

The huge placards, specially made, knocked your eye out. We were all done as hens, sittin', standin' and struttin'. Funniest was Nelson Eddy's mother, sittin', written underneath: "She laid the biggest egg, but it was golden."

Had a chat with our Emily Post, Juana Neal Levy, hoping to crash the society column.

Rosa Ponselle, wearing the dress she was married in—crushed gray velvet, with attached hood hanging down the back, looking as she did when she was a bride but without the muff of orchids, discussing the European situation with Constance Collier. Dora Miller, who's done so much for the lace industry. She wings back and forth across the ocean as though it were a mud puddle. Dora got quite a start when Jeanette MacDonald walked in wearing the same hat she had bought that afternoon.

Mrs. "Little Caesar" Robinson was getting ideas for her next party. Mrs. Irish had us sign up for the Hollywood Bowl.

But we only stopped cackling when Eddie Adams sang "Thanks For the Memory," and tears as big as kernels of corn popped out of the eyes of us old hens.

The roosters just couldn't stay away. So husbands and boy friends trooped in around midnight.

Ida, a swell egg, had hatched one of the best parties ever given in Hollywood. And I'm thanking her.

I hoped to get an interview with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. But she's too fast for me. I couldn't catch her.

In the morning she visited four studios, was guest of honor at an important luncheon, after which she wrote her column. At 3 o'clock she had her personal friends and their children in for a visit. Took time out for a bath and change of costume before her dash to Long Beach for another lecture.

She's dressier this year, with her bobbed hair and little bit of makeup. And oozes charm when's talking peace. While at the same time her husband is building the largest Navy in the world. But as Gracie Allen says, "I don't get it. Do you?"

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, March 22.

". . . What?' The Income Tax Bureau said you forgot to file your return last year? . . . Well, don't worry. I've got the records . . No, dear, I haven't got it in black-and-white. It's in black-and-red . . . So come home early. It's time you turned day into day."

12 P. M. "Ethel duPont Roosevelt is very sick at Charlottesville," a friend of the First Family whispers at the Tavern . . . "Alan and I have a chance to write the adaptation of 'The Women.'" Dorothy Campbell relates at the Onyx Club, "but I don't think we'll do it, I couldn't do that—to the members of my sex" . . . "I appeared in George Bernard Shaw's 'Heartbreak House,'" Sir Cedric Hardwicke states at 21. "Y'know, when he wrote the play he was stumped for an ending. But then Shaw was in London during the air raids—and there got the idea for the amazing last scene. Shaw hadn't realized before what a terrible thing an air raid is. And now it's such a timely theme" . . . Abe Lyman leaves the Warwick, where the doorman informs: "This kid has been waiting two days to get your autograph." Lyman obliges . . . "I wanted your autograph to make sure you're Lyman," the lad informs. "I had to make sure because, here—here's a summons I have for you."

1 A. M. A gray-haired, spectacled customer waits 20 minutes for a table at La Conga, the Cuban night club, and finally is seated. He's Gerardo Machada—former President of Cuba . . . "At the St. Patrick's Day party for the benefit of the Russian Nobility Association," the headwaiter states at the Ambassador, "the daughter of Chinese Ambassador Wang came wearing a native Chinese costume covered with a mink coat. Baron Deuth joined the 8 Big Apple dancers and stopped the show by doing Russian acrobatics without once losing his monocle. In gratitude to St. Patrick the Russian royalists almost blew themselves up by mixing Irish whisky and Russian vodka" . . . "Vernon Duke escorted this girl he said has $75,000,000," an agent reports at Tony's. "Duke said she's too skinny, so the girl ordered 2 fattening chocolate sodas. He asked: 'Doesn't that prove she loves me?' He was told: 'No, it just proves she likes ice cream sodas.'"

2 A. M. Liberto & Owen, dancers, highlight the new gay and top-notch revue at the Paradise—which again features Broadway's prettiest girls: Two blocks away, at the Casa Manana, Sally Rand receives the reports. "I'm glad those dancers clicked," she confides. "I'm their manager" . . . "Mary is waiting for Goldwyn to arrive," Buddy Rogers states. "They're to discuss the United Artists deal" . . . "That reminds me," a film notable relates. "Goldwyn attended a meeting and called one of the men a thief. Doc Giannini, who presided, quieted Sam and convinced him that an apology was in order. So Goldwyn offered the man his hand and said: 'I apologize for calling you a thief. I shouldn't have called you a thief—because I can't prove it'" . . . Libby Holman is planning to quit the show, "You Never Know," a producer assures at the Cotton Club. "Otherwise the court guardians of her baby might enter objection."

3 A. M. "Avery Slack, the photographer, is a descendant of Daniel Webster," Hildegarde relates at the Gay Nineties. "He was stumped by the spelling of 'pulchritude,' reached for a dictionary and then finally gave up. So we showed him why he couldn't find it. He was looking in the Manhattan phone directory" . . . "I just came back from Florida," a publicist confides at the 18 Club. "Evalyn Walsh McLean, who owns the Hope Diamond, is there and has hired all the Big Apple dancers in Florida to come to her hotel in Palm Beach and entertain every afternoon, just for her" . . . "At the Senatorial hearings regarding the American Youth act," an official relates at Tony's, "Rexford Holmes attacked the American Youth Congress. Later, the latter group returned to the offices in the Maryland Bldg. and were surprised to see Holmes enter a door across the hall. No name was on the door—but it's Holmes' office."

4 A. M. "Yes, it's true," Quentin Reynolds confides at the Stork Club, "I'm one of the backers of the forthcoming newspaper, the Connecticut Nutmeg" . . . "Kirsten Flagstad refused to take a curtain call with Lauritz Melchior last week at the Metropolitan," a reporter advises at El Morocco. "And the night before their performance Flagstad insisted she wouldn't pose for a picture with him. The picture was taken anyhow" . . . In a major West Side cafe Band Leader Pancho asks the waiter to bring his check. "No check, sir," the waiter explains. "I'm taking care of that myself. Because you played a benefit at Comstock Prison while I was there." . . . "The Yale Library has the original manuscript of Thornton Wilder's 'Our Town,'" Producer Jed Harris informs at Lindy's. "The play will be out in book form soon, but it will be different from the produced version."

5 A. M. "That noted New York figure who is wanted by the New Jersey police in connection with a murder that became a political scandal," a detective declares at Dave's, "has stepped foot in Jersey a number of times—without the police doing anything about it. He's been in Newark." . . . Ely Culbertson, at Reuben's, is reminded of Karn's million-dollar suit gainst him. "Since 1932," Culbertson is told, "76 lawsuits have been started among noted bridge players.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

For Five Years, Wife Has Objected to Husband's Devotion to Mother and Sister; He Asks Advice.

DERA MARY HAWORTH: I have been married for five years and am the father of a little girl, nearly three years old. Prior to my marriage, I lived with my mother and sister and had always felt that I would not consider marriage until they were in a position to get along without me. Finally that time arrived and I got married. I will admit my people are not too excited about my wife, although they hold no grievance against her. My wife does not care to visit my mother and the latter feels that way about visiting her. Nevertheless, my mother and sister are crazy about the child and I take the baby to visit them at least once a week.

• • • •

On the slightest provocation my wife will storm in this manner: "Your mother never did anything for you. Why should you take the baby to see her? Everything your mother has belongs to me. Your mother wears an expensive coat. I suppose you paid for it. No wonder we can't save any money. Your mother can't ride in the car. It's my car," etc.

• • • •

In other words, Miss Haworth, she knows it hurts me when she says things that are not very kind about my sister and mother. Although I try to laugh it off, it upsets me and causes me to say things to her that I don't mean. I don't claim to be an angel, but I encourage my wife to buy the best and I do provide a good living. As for her, she's sweet, sensible and as good a wife as one would want, with the exception of that one fault of temper. I've taken these squabbles for the entire time we've been married and I'm afraid I'm beginning to weaken. I love the baby dearly. What do you advise? Sincerely,

WORRIED HUSBAND.

Immemorial Triangle.

DEAR WORRIED HUSBAND: Your wife is both jealous and suspicious of your devotion to your mother and sister, and not without justification. Any youth who has been reared by his mother to suppose his first duty is to her or to his sister is a chap who is headed for trouble with his wife if and when he marries. And that trouble is not so much of his or his wife's making as it is the making of a selfish, possessive mother, who began, almost instinctively, in her son's childhood, to so train and twist his emotional nature that a wife might never supplant her in his heart.

• • • •

Triangles which include a man's wife and mother are as old as the hills, with the mother holding all the advantage. Older, wiser, shrewder, she knows how—when she chooses to do so—to make the honestly indignant, justifiably resentful wife look like the villainess of the piece. Often the wife doesn't know just what antagonistic, psychological undertow she is struggling against in dealing with a husband and a mother who have been for years too closely identified with each other emotionally. If she did, she might fight back with subtler weapons than she generally employs.

• • • •

Usually, when embroiled in such an unfair, unwholesome tug-o'-war for her husband's first allegiance, she boils over in open dislike of her mother-in-law; a dislike that, nine times out of ten, is wholly justified. She recognizes a stealthy, dogged enemy; a love thief, if you will; a woman who is out to take her husband's love away from her, if it can be managed (although, of course, the mother, if confronted with this accusation, would deny it with horror; and might even truly believe herself incapable of such a thing; yet the fact that she is capable of it, and is actually trying to do it, whether she realizes it or not, remains incontrovertibly true).

• • • •

Such a mother-in-law only makes peace with her daughter-in-law when she has her completely conquered. If she can absorb the latter into her scheme of things as a satellite; if she, the mother, can reduce the wife to the position of stepdaughter, so to speak; keeping the mother-son relationship supreme and the position of wife secondary to it, and a rather negligible second at that, she will treat her with patronizing graciousness. But she will never give her son up to his wife if she can prevent it; and by that I mean she will never permit him to treat her as second-fiddle woman in his life and not suffer horribly in his own conscience for so doing—if she can help it.

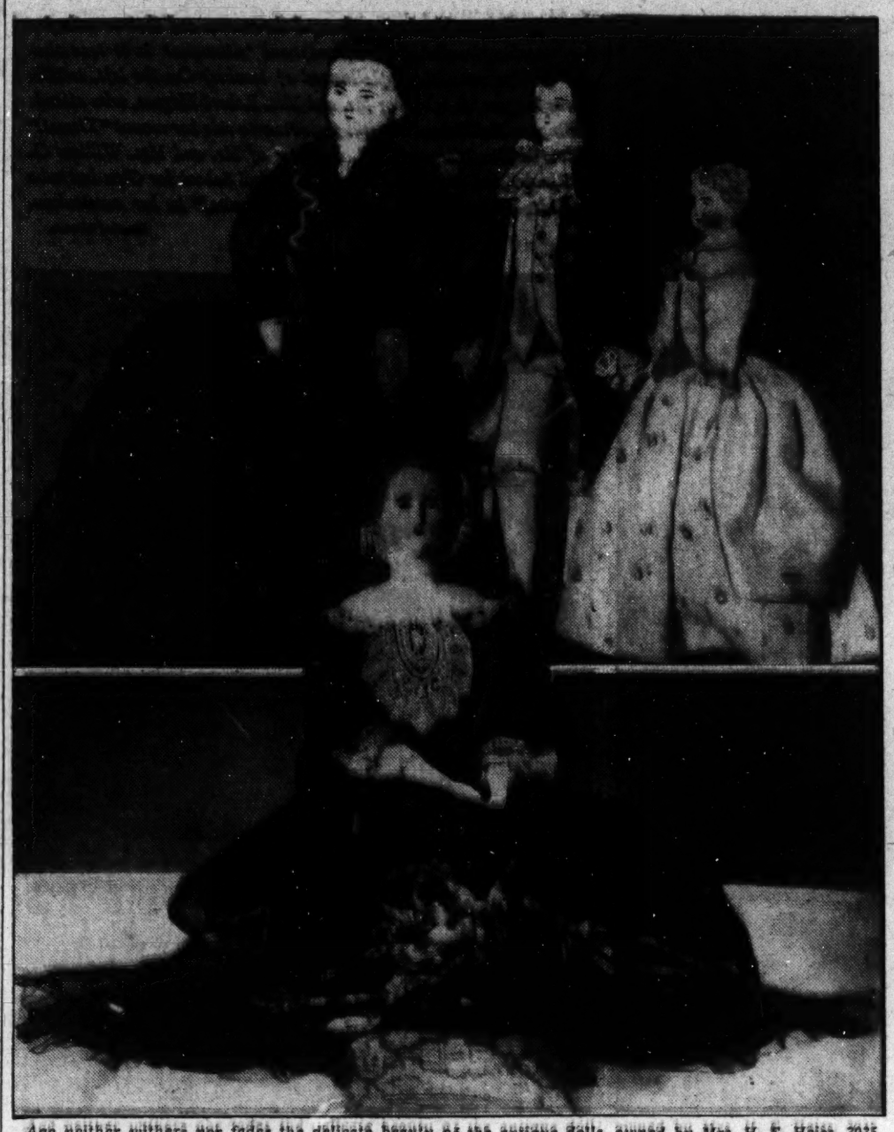
• • • •

And yet, when a man marries, presumably he closes forever the book of his youth and turns himself entire thereafter to his life with his wife and their children. To continue muddling back and forth between two camps, trying to burn incense and make peace offerings before two altars, is to declare himself an emotional adolescent who, so far as his psychological stature is concerned, is still in swaddling clothes. Having married his wife because he loves her, what he should do, on discovering that his wife and mother don't "click," is to put his mother firmly in the background, no matter how regretfully.

• • • •

Obviously, your wife is not dealing tactfully with the situation. Yet I question whether diplomacy would solve the problem. It would only defer the day of reckoning. In her impetuosity your wife is merely hastening the necessary and inevitable showdown. Sooner or later you have got to face the implications of the struggle and to choose with finality between your mother and your wife as the sole sharer of your joys and sorrows. And if you choose your mother, it will mean, probably, that you are regressing rather than maturing; that you are giving up the struggle necessary for freeing yourself, emotionally, from her apron strings. M. H.

Beauty and Dress Styles of Past Are Revealed in Doll Collection



Age neither withers nor fades the delicate beauty of the antique dolls, owned by Mrs. H. E. Heiss, 3035 Newark street northwest. Queen Victoria and King Albert stand by Catherine Rommely (seated above). Miss Minnie Carruthers (below) wears a dainty black chiffon dress and appliqued petticoat.

Mrs. A. E. Heiss' Hobby Ties Up With Study of History and Costume Design; Restores Antique Dolls to Original Likenesses.

By Genevieve Reynolds.

A LITTLE Dresden doll, about 24 inches in height, whose nose is being restored with skilful plastic surgery by its owner is worth $200 in actual cash and much more in sentiment.

Eyes undimmed by age, coiffure still perfectly arranged, Harriet takes her place in the valuable collection of dolls owned by Mrs. A. E. Heiss, 3035 Newark street northwest. She has blue eyes, blond hair and white leather hands. Her dress is made of white satin and point de Vennese lace. And though she was brought from Paris in 1827 she by no means feels aged and out of place. To keep her company she has companions that range chronologically from the pre-Revolutionary days to 1914.

Antiquity alone does not entitle a doll an abode in Mrs. Heiss' collection, for she selects them according to worth and beauty.

Dolls Have Personality.

Each doll becomes a personage as soon as it reaches her. She studies its lineage and determines its age by the hair dress and the dyes that went into the making of the face and hair. Then she dresses the dolls accordingly. Usually, she uses scraps of fine cloth and lace from old garments that once belonged to famous people, or some of her own clothes that have a special significance. For instance, Harriet's dress and underclothes are made from parts of Mrs. Heiss' daughter's trousseau. The costume of another doll, Cynthia, is made from Mrs. Heiss' own wedding gown.

She makes each dress, petticoat and pantalette by hand so that the dolls may be dressed and undressed at will. In both design and execution, she displays artistic skill in reproducing as nearly as possible the original costume peculiar to the doll's age.

Bodies Restored.

But before she dresses her dolls she usually has to restore some or all parts of their bodies or faces. "It is seldom, if ever," she said, "that I find one entirely of one period. Usually some parts are misssing or mismated so I have to supply and substitute the missing parts. I nearly always make new bodies for sanitary reasons.

"In the case of Harriet, I had to rebuild one side of her nose. I did this with porcelain. I also gave her new arms and hands which were made from soft, white leather."

Another prized doll recently added to the collection is Miss Minnie Carruthers, a portrait crown luster doll that had been in the same family since 1860. (Minnie is called Miss because she is so delicately refined in appearance and is definitely a patrician lady.) The doll came from Mrs. Charles McDonald, of Mansfield, Ohio, and was named for Miss Minnie Carruthers, a noted opera singer. Minnie has round cheeks, deep blue eyes and blond hair arranged with curls on one side and kept in place with a "snood" or "waterfall" net. Her dress is a tight bodice, full skirted, and is made of black chiffon with lace whipped at the bottom of the skirt instead of a hem. A black taffeta petticoat, appliqued in varicolored ribbons, forms a dainty background for the sheer dress. Rare old lace forms a jabot for the low, round neck.

Have Sloping Shoulders.

Most of the dolls have round, sloping shoulders, similar to those of real women a century ago.

The oldest doll now in the collection is a tiny, four-inch model that was made with wooden pegs. Mrs. Henry Ford offered an antique dealer in Detroit a commission of $50 to purchase her a similar doll. "When I heard this," said Mrs. Heiss, "I offered her my doll but she did not want it because of a minor defect. Hers had to be perfect."

Collecting dolls and dressing them is by no means an idle hobby with this Washington woman. While it affords her pleasure and recreation it also opens up new fields of study in history and of costume design. "I do not do anything halfway," she explained, "therefore, I spend time looking up the ages of the dolls to determine the periods in which they belong, and the type of clothes worn in that era. Then I copy the gowns from original models in portraits or from those in the New York museums.

Will Aid Museum.

"My chief aim in collecting authentic antique dolls, aside from the pleasure it gives me, is to perpetuate the various types for future generations to enjoy. I intend to offer my collection to some museum whenever it is completed. Unless these old dolls are preserved and restored to their original likeness they will soon be extinct."

Each generation has a distinct type of doll, Mr. Heiss points out. For example, the early American dolls were all men and women. Today practically all the dolls are of the baby type.

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Dieters Must Eat Proper Foods to Preserve Their Teeth.

By Ida Jean Kain.

JUST ABOUT the time you cut your wisdom tooth you start having the others out, and the loss of a second tooth leaves a void that can never be satisfactorily filled. You feel an acute and lingering sense of bereavement, and perhaps a growing suspicion that something could have been done.

The day has gone by when any puzzling malady was ascribed to the condition of your teeth and you were urged to have the whole set out and get it over with! As Dr. Logan Clendening pointed out in a recent article on rheumatism, it's surprising how much you miss your teeth when the ailment is gone.

Nowadays, when the dentist spots a cavity that might develop into a wide open space, he is more than likely to take you to task about your diet! Milk and orange juice are not just food for the growing child whose teeth are in formation. They are equally important to the healthy denture of the adult. When foods. In the last 50 years the yearly sugar consumption of the average person has increased from 10 pounds to 110 pounds, making it a dietary factor to be reckoned with and therefore a consideration in the health of the teeth. Be sure that you get your fruits and fruit juices daily.

Citrus Fruits Needed.

We know that calcium (it used to be known as lime) is needed for strong teeth, but we are less likely to appreciate the important part played by Vitamin C. Not only is this vitamin necessary to the utilization of calcium but it is a separate factor in the health of the teeth. Your teeth will be the first part of your body to be affected by a lack of Vitamin C.

Richest sources of Vitamin C are the citrus fruits and the list includes orange juice, grapefruit juice and lemons. Pineapple juice and tomato juice are also valuable sources. Raw cabbage is the vegetable richest in C. To be on the safe side you need daily one-half glass of orange juice or grapefruit juice, or 1½ glasses of tomato juice, or 1 glass of pineapple juice. Many authorities advise a quart of milk a day, or the equivalent, calcium-rich foods such as cheese, cottage cheese and eggs.

Don't Overlook Milk.

In her determination to take as little food as possible the reducer is inclined to overlook the value of milk. Luckily for all who are trying to lose weight, skimming the milk deprives it of none of its calcium and cuts the calorie count in half. The same is true of buttermilk.

Too much sugar in the diet dulls the appetite for the protective

Today's HEALTH TALK

Gall Bladder Trouble.

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

It was pointed out yesterday that most stomach symptoms are functional or due to reflex influence from disease of a different source. Perhaps one of the commonest cause of dyspepsia or stomach upset is gall bladder infection.

The gall bladder is very subject to infection. All the blood that comes from the intestines goes to the liver and sometimes this blood is heavily loaded with poisons and germs. The liver excretes both the poisons and the germs in the bile, so it is not surprising the bile and the gall bladder may contain living germs, and these infect the bile and the walls of the gall bladder.

Infection in the gall bladder may go through a number of stages, ranging from a very mild catarrh to the formation of gallstones, and even the formation of pus in the gall bladder. Since the gall bladder lies quite close to the outlet of the stomach, and since it empties just beyond the outlet of the stomach, it is not surprising that when any of these conditions occur the stomach may be the mouthpiece. The stomach has been called "the greatest liar in the anatomy," and sometimes it may say "I am sick" when the trouble is actually in the gall bladder.

Such cases can be spotted by a capable diagnostician by a careful examination of the history of the case, localization of tenderness and the help of the X-ray.

Treatment in severe cases is surgery, but a great many people, quite properly, do not like to face this prospect. Their views gain a good deal of support from the medical profession. I have known several doctors with gall bladder trouble who put off operation and were content to be treated by medical means.

Medical treatment consists of small, easily digested meals, low in fat. Many people gain relief by swallowing a teaspoon of salts, such as sodium phosphate in a glass of warm water before breakfast while dressing in the morning.

BREAKFAST.
Sliced bananas on grapenuts with sugar and cream
Soft egg in egg cup
Crisp bacon
Hot graham gems Butter
Coffee Milk for children

LUNCH.
Stuffed sausage
Potato salad
Chilled cherry cup
Coffee

DINNER.

STUFFED SAUSAGE.

Buy the large garlic sausages and allow one to a serving. Split. Insert a piece of American cheese. Wrap the sausage and cheese with a strip of bacon. Secure ends of bacon with toothpicks. Bake until cheese is melted and bacon is crisp. This will take about 15 minutes. Remove the toothpicks and serve with a potato salad garnished with pimiento and black olives cut lengthwise and freed from stones.

New Breakfast Plan.

Just as bears hiberate so some people go into a winter slump, perhaps unknowingly. It happens particularly, when the diet tends toward the rich, heavy and more concentrated foods.

A strong defense against such a plan is to have a two-fruit breakfast plan. With chilled fruit juice as a starter, serve the second fruit either plain, or as an ingredient in cereal, toast, muffins, cinnamon rolls, or pancakes. Breakfast becomes not only more appetizing but more healthful.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, March 22.

IT IS A very long time since I reported on New York's most acute and important problem, "the dog situation." Among our 8,000,000 many thousands of souls have a normal and laudable love of our four-footed friends, but the matter of keeping these dumb chums cooped in an apartment as many as 20 flights up is a very serious one indeed. In fact, it is as cruel to hole up a much-loved pup in a Manhattan apartment as it is to do this to a small child—and on that I can speak with authority.

ALICE HUGHES

For this reason, pet dogs receive an astonishing amount of public and municipal attention in New York. Not only is the usual leading editorial in the "Park Avenue Social Revue" called "Lead your dog to the curb," but hardly a day passes here but what some phase of the matter is aired in the daily press. One friend actually proposed that all canines should be forthwith banished from Manhattan. He was buried under such public scorn that I don't think he has yet been found, and may even be dead. And within the last few weeks an assemblyman named Moran, resident in the borough of Brooklyn, offered a bill which would raise the cost of a dog license here from $2 to the staggering sum of $10, which is dangerous class legislation. In fact, our canine population of over 300,000 barked so loudly in protest that the racket broke the slumbers of Philadelphia.

Assemblyman Moran's project died, and our dogs go on. We cannot deny that in a huge, packed city they have their unpleasant points, socially speaking, but they must and do exist. Even as do their masters, and for as little reason.

Speaking of dog personalities, the newest and most interesting here is a small one called "Rags," slightly Cairn. Like the ladies who demonstrate knitting needles, and those who eat face creams to prove their desirability, "Rags" demonstrates a patent city exerciser. The poor thing has trotted hundreds of miles on it, going nowhere, but showing how the contraption can substitute for a 10-acre field.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN: Of all the screen stars who came here to dare the Broadway stage this year, Elissa Landi and Constance Cummings have had the worst luck. Pretty Connie had two flops in rapid succession, and retreated to London with Husband Benn Levy. Now Elissa has opened in her second play of the season, "Empress of Destiny," in which she plays no less a personage than Catherine the Great. And so feeble and dismal were the notices that I fear the show has little chance of survival. This would make La Landi neck and neck with La Cummings—twice at bat, no runs, no hits, two errors. Or so the boys say.

A couple of girls named Cora Jarrett and Kate Oglebay have made a play out of Scott Fitzgerald's book, "Tender Is the Night" after all these years. Hope the ladies get a Broadway production.

Final news from the Metropolitan bird-house. There will be no popular priced spring season this year. It loses too much money, though it digs up some fine young singers. And the Town Hall Club just threw a lovely dinner in honor of the twenty-fifth singing year of Lauritz Melchior, the Great Dane who is our finest Wagnerian tenor, and whose pretty wife is as tiny and cute as he is enormous.

The GENTLER SEX

By Malvina Lindsay.

Spring Hat.

YOU OPEN the hat box, your heart aglow. You remember how alive, different and smart looking the hat had seemed to make you in the millinery store mirror. After trying on an endless succession of weird shapes, you had welcomed it as an answer to prayer. True, there were a few things about it . . . still you couldn't expect everything in a hat . . . and it was so much better than any you had seen. You had left the store the weight of the world suddenly lifted from your shoulders.

• • • •

You eagerly remove the tissue paper. There it is! The same shiny black straw! The same cute ribbon bow! You take it out, hold it aloft. It seems a little strange someway . . . the crown looks so flat . . . as if somebody had sat on it. Oh, well, it will look different on.

You put it on your head, go to the mirror. For a moment you are confused by the strange image that confronts you. Oh, well, you simply aren't used to these shapes. Besides, you haven't got it on right. You tilt it further over your forehead—the way the clerk said "they" were wearing them. No! That makes you look as sullen as Mussolini. You try a dip over one eye. That's a little better. Still it makes the other side of your face look like Stone Mountain.

You bring the bow more to one side, then to the other. You try to shape the unrelenting brim into a softer line. But it won't shape. Besides, the saleswoman has cautioned you against that. "It's the thing that makes them smart," she had decreed.

You study the hat with the hand mirror. It's not bad from a certain angle on one side. But on the other . . . well, there's nothing you can do about that.

• • • •

You wonder if maybe you shouldn't have gotten the big sailor with the blue pompom at that first place you looked. Still how on earth could you wear it with your red blouse . . . and your green and yellow print? Still there was that little turban with the veil—yes, but it was too extreme, and besides, you wanted a brim for summer. You think them all over, the multitudinous hats you tried on. Certainly this was the best of the lot.

Still—maybe you should have looked at Saijem's. A lot of people you know have gotten smart hats there. But it's so far, and there would be all that energy expended . . . maybe for nothing.

Besides, this is a serviceable hat. You can wear it anywhere. And if you ever went on a train . . . still why should you always be buying hats to wear on trains when you NEVER go on a train. You think regretfully of a frivolous little Watteau shape with dusty pink roses that you considered. It would have been darling for cocktail parties. Still, you can't buy hats just for cocktail parties.

• • • •

You try some more readjustments with the hand mirror. It's a little old looking where it goes up in the back . . . still after all you aren't 16 any longer. You might just as well make up your mind to be your age.

Besides, it isn't so bad if you can remember to hold your head up . . . and your chin in . . . and not let your mouth get too set . . . and sort of puff out your cheeks at the side . . . and if you could just bring your hair in a little closer above the ears . . . and maybe have it cut a little shorter in the back and—ah, that's what you need! A new coiffure! The hat will look a lot better when you do your hair differently.

It will look better too when you get your new blouse . . . and some new long gloves . . . and a real good looking pocketbook. Another thing, you can get a veil to soften it . . . and a little later change the bow for a trim with a little more pep in it.

• • • •

You walk up and down before the mirror, head poised carefully, trying to smile brightly at yourself. If you can take a little better care of your skin—that will help, too.

You turn again before the mirror, try to readjust the brim over the side you don't like. No, there's nothing that can be done about it. You wonder if the crown could be raised a little. No, that's impossible.

Well, there's no use to worry about it. After all if you take care of yourself . . . and look rested . . . and are careful about your make-up . . . and are always bright and pleasant and vivacious and charming, it won't be so bad. Of course not! Personality is all that counts in life anyway!

Molded Gelatin Or Ice Cream May Win a Prize of $3

In the spring a housewife's fancy often turns to molding. Many acceptable Lenten foods and favorite spring dishes are plastic and adapt themselves to service in a variety of shapes and patterns. A ring of fluffy steamed rice can be served with a number of spicy seafood and meat fillings. Gelatin dishes served in design with a colorful garnish brighten many spring menus. Even cakes and cookies can be served in design.

What are some of your inspirations? Do you like to serve your gelatin dishes in layers? Or have you a special type of mold that you use of shaping them? Do you use molds in freezing your ice creams?

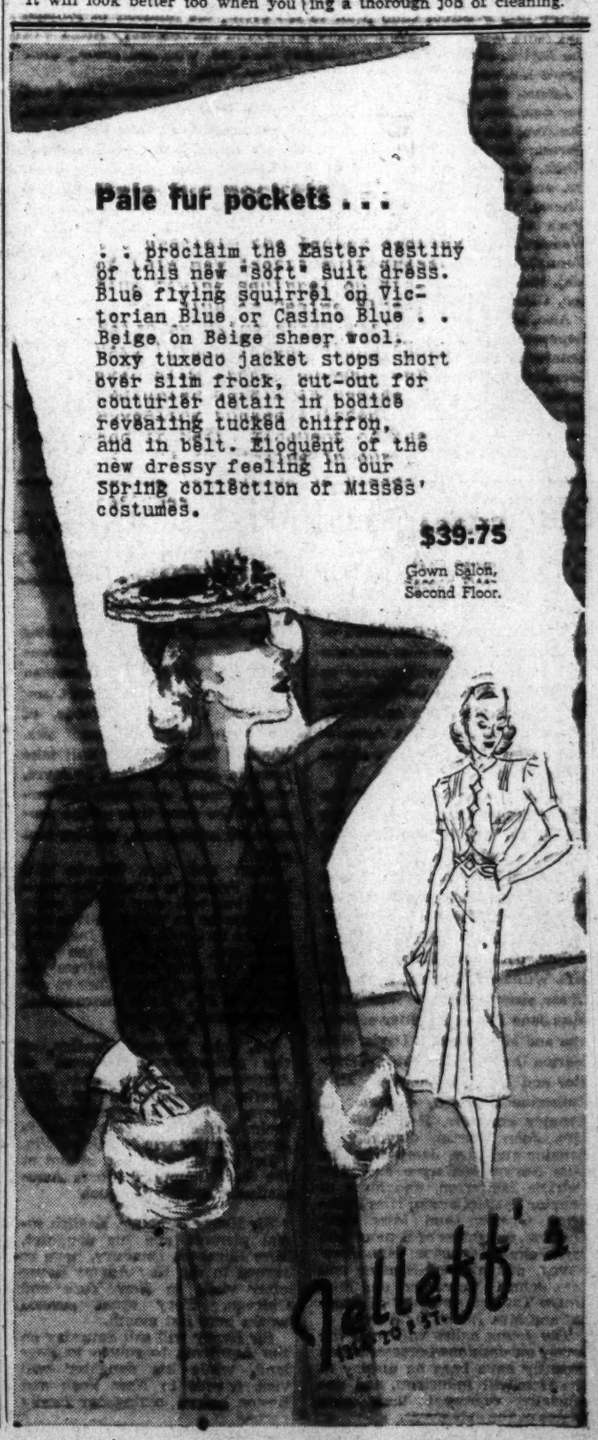
Five cash prizes are offered for your ideas. The first is $3, the second, $2, and there are three prizes of $1 each.

To enter the contest, choose your most successful molded dish, write out the recipe for preparing it, giving not only ingredients, but clear directions for preparation. Enclose your name and address and mail to Jean Green, The Post Food Editor, before March 26.

Spring Cleaning For Skin Advised

A spring cleaning for the skin is as necessary as a new wardrobe with which to start the season, contends Mme. Elene, of Vienna, who is at a local store this week. To do this effectively she suggests using in addition to the usual cleansing creams and skin foods, a cream that will penetrate the pores and stir up sluggish circulation. Such a cream, she says, should be left on the face about 15 minutes in connection with the nightly beauty ritual.

To stimulate the skin of the body, Mme. Elene suggests bathing with pine bath salts or oil, plus a stiff brush or sponge—to cleanse properly and deeply. The usual method of just stepping in and out of the bath does nothing for the skin she claims—that is the reason why blackheads and enlarged pores are so prevalent. "The pine aroma acts as a tonic and the scrubbing with brush or stiff sponge is good for the circulation, as well as promoting a thorough job of cleaning."



Pale fur pockets . . .
. . proclaim the Easter destiny of this new "soft" suit dress. Blue flying squirrel on Victorian Blue or Casino Blue . . Beige on Beige sheer wool. Boxy tuxedo jacket stops short over slim frock, cut-out for couturier detail in bodice revealing tucked chiffon, and in belt. Eloquent of the new dressy feeling in our Spring collection of Misses' costumes.

Musicale Given by Vandenbergs at Sulgrave Features Daughter and Celebrates Birthday

Numerous Official, Diplomatic, Resident Guests Comment on Brevity or Express Willingness to Stay for More.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

High lighting the Lenten social season, the musicale given by Senator and Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg at the Sulgrave Club last night drew notables in droves . . . featured an artist who won thundrous applause every time she played . . . and turned out to be a brilliant gathering on many accounts.

With Miss Elizabeth Vandenberg, accomplished pianist, giving a varied program, and her father sharing the spotlight—since the event also celebrated his birthday—the party was an exceptional success. Beginning with Chopin's "Prelude C Minor," carrying on through selections from Debussy and Wagner, the program reached a high point in the Wagner overture from the "Meistersinger," when Miss Vandenberg had the assistance of her teacher, Kurt Hetzel, at the second piano. But it was the encore—the "Blue Danube" number—that brought down the house and elicited an ovation that demanded an additional encore. The latter came along presently in the lilting tunes of "Happy Birthday to You," and from the way a number of guests arose and took a bow, it looked as if several persons besides Senator Vandenberg might be birthday celebrating.

HOPE R. MILLER.

Incidentally, prior to the party, Senator Vandenberg had averred he was receiving "the one gift" he wanted most—a concert given by his daughter. But in addition to the musicale, planned by Mrs. Vandenberg and featuring his daughter, he was showered with telegrams of congratulation all day yesterday, from all parts of the country.

At last evening's party, he and Mrs. Vandenberg received their guests at the top of the stairway. She was gowned in black net, set off with a bolero trimmed in braided scroll designs and a corsage of gardenias. Shortly after the throng of guests were seated in the ballroom, Miss Vandenberg, in a cloud of pale pink organza, fashioned with a fitted bodice and a billowing skirt, came up the stairway with Mr. Hetzel and was escorted to the small stage by him and her father. Her simple frock, trimmed only with two small rosebud clips at the base of each shoulder strap in front, was particularly becoming with her blonde hair and creamy complexion.

Following the program, guests found their way to the buffet, where champagne and other drinks were served, and then on to the dining room where supper was the order of the hour. A birthday cake, bearing greetings and all the usual trimmings, except candles, centered the table and was sampled by a number of guests before supper was finished.

Many Notables Glimpsed in Crowd

The company of approximately 300 guests presented a sizable cross-section of the Capital's official, diplomatic and residential society. Among those glimpsed in the crowd were Justice and Mrs. Owen J. Roberts—she in cream satin—and their daughter, Miss Elizabeth Roberts; the Polish Ambassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, whose coat of Florida suntan was the envy of everyone who saw him; Senator and Mrs. Peter Goelet Gerry, Miss Mabel Boardman, gowned in gold and silver lame; Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, the latter wearing a handsome frock of dark red velvet; the Argentine Ambassador and Senora de Espil, who wore a black ensemble with long tight sleeves and bands of sequin trimming the edge of the tunic.

Such music enthusiasts as the Belgian Ambassador and Countess van der Straten-Ponthoz, the Minister of Finland and Mme. Eero Jarnefelt, and the Minister of Switzerland and Mme. Marc Peter and Mrs. Truxtun Beale were on hand for the event. Also the Czechoslovak Minister and Mme. Vladimir Hurban, and the German Ambassador, Dr. Hans Dieckhoff, Senator and Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark and Senator and Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge.

The Peruvian Ambassador, Manuel de Freyre y Santander, who makes no bones about being only mildly fond of music, was applauding Miss Vandenberg's numbers as loudly as anyone, and left off clapping for the Blue Danube number only after the artist of the evening sat down again to play the Happy Birthday selection.

Several Dinners Precede the Party

Several dinners preceded the musicale, with hostesses bringing their guests on to hear Miss Vandenbehg. Mrs. Merriam Curtis entertained at the 1925 F Street Club prior to the event; the Minister of Finland and Mme. Jarnefelt gave a dinner and so did the Honorary Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold H. Sims, who had among their guests Mr. and Mrs. George Shaw, of New York.

Among others seen at the musicale were Mrs. Demarest Lloyd and her daughter, Miss Angelica Lloyd; the Minister of Sweden and Mme. Bostrom; Mr. and Mrs. Thad H. Brown; Representative and Mrs. Bruce Barton; Representative and Mrs. Robert Low Bacon; Mrs. McCook Knox, who was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Kathleen Knox; Dr. and Mrs. William A. Morgan; the Chilean Ambassador, Manuel Trucco, with his daughter, Miss Rebecca Trucco, who wore a trim frock of rosebrry satin; the Minister of Denmark and Mme. Otto Wadsted, who was gowned in red velvet; Mrs. Edward E. (Dolly) Gann; Mme. Julia Cantacuzene; Representative and Mrs. Ralph Church; Maj. and Mrs. Parker West; Ralph Snowden Hill; Mrs. Francis Whitten, Clarence Howes, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Owsley.

Also, Mrs. George Sloane, who was up from Warrenton for the event; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Fleming Newbold, Senator Arthur Capper, Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. de Bianchi; the Counselor of the German Embassy and Frau Hans Thomsen; Mr. and Mrs. John Herrick, Mrs. Louis Caldwell, Representative and Mrs. Sol Bloom and Miss Vera Bloom, Mr. and Mrs. Royal McKenna, Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris, and many others.

Riding Is Part Of Springtime Study

CAN it be possible they've changed the courses and that now they're teaching readin', ridin' (hard) and 'rithmetic? Is it true that Dobbin rates the apple instead of teacher? On the left, is Miss Anne Hagner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hagner, who attends Arlington Hall School but still finds time to ride her mount "Kismet." Below is Miss Margaret Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Hill, who studies at the National Cathedral School for Girls but who includes canters on her horse, "Questionnaire," in her curriculum.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

A PRINCESS arrived in Washington yesterday but got away again before anybody had a chance to give a party for her. She is the Princess de Faucigny Lucinge, whose peiture you have seen countless times in fashion magazines, and she was at the Hay-Adams before continuing on to Florida.

Practically her only social engagement during her brief stay was luncheon with the Attache of the French Embassy and Countess de Gramont, who are close friends of hers. Chic and attractive, the Princess is also a friend of Elsa Maxwell.

DUDLEY HARMON.

IN WASHINGTON, after an absence of many years, are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sweetser. The former has an important position with the League of Nations and is over here to arrange for an exhibit of the League's in the New York World's Fair of 1939. They will be at the Wardman Park Hotel until Friday.

The Sweetsers have friends in every country, having dispensed hospitality to everybody lucky enough to carry a letter of introduction to them in Geneva. Their home is one of the loveliest in the Swiss capital.

Yesterday the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Francis B. Sayre gave an informal tea for neophyte members of the Foreign Service who have come back here to study, and for members of the Joint Committee on Philippine Affairs. The drive out to their Spring Valley home was particularly enjoyable because the yellow forsythia and crimson Judas trees seem to have burst into bloom overnight.

The tea table in the dining room was attractively set with a centerpiece of spring flowers, but most everybody chose to gather on the terrace, overlooking a small garden with a fountain at one end.

Among the "students" present was Geoffrey Parsons and his attractive wife of a few months. She, incidentally, is a niece of Sir Herbert Marler, Canadian Minister, and before their arrival from Cuba Lady Marler picked out a charming house for them on O street in Georgetown. Yesterday Mrs. Parsons, who is a very pretty blonde, wore a black ensemble with a silver fox scarf.

• • • •

MR. AND MRS. EVAN WILSON, who have come back here from a tour of duty in Mexico, were also present yesterday. Foreign service students are called back to Washington after a few months' duty abroad to study in a classroom located in the basement of the State Department. Then they are sent out again in July to other assignments.

Mrs. Sayre received her guests in the drawing room, which was decorated with vases of forsythia and iris. Among those who called during the afternoon was Mrs. John Van A. MacMurray, wife of the United States envoy to Turkey, who was detailed to work with the Philippine Commission here. She said yesterday she did not know how much longer her husband's work would keep him in Washington.

Others present were Dr. Quintin Paredes, Philippine commissioner; Mrs. George Messersmith, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, who was accompanied by her niece, Miss Layton, of Wilmington, Del.; Mrs. Patterson Roberts, Earl Dickover, of the State Department, and Mrs. Dickover; Mrs. Huddle, of the department, and Miss Helen Bell, who makes her home with the Assistant Secretary and Mrs. Sayre.

Capital to Fete Visiting Officers

The program of events planned for Vice Admiral Sidney J. Merrick and his officers of H. M. S. York, docking here Monday, looks as if it had been worked out by stop-watch. It will get off to an early start at 6 o'clock, when the Navy Yard pilot boards the York at Piney Point. At 2 p. m. the British cruiser will arrive officially at the Navy Yard, covered with glory, plus a salute fired off Hains Point and another by the battery at the yard.

Among the parties at which the officers will be feted is the dinner which the Chief of Naval Operations and Mrs. William D. Leahy will give Wednesday evening, March 30, at their home at the Naval Observatory. The commander in chief of the York will repay all this hospitality at a dinner Friday evening, April 7. The other officers of the York will give an "at home" on the ship Thursday, March 31, and the British Ambassador and Lady Lindsay wil be hosts at a dinner for the commander in chief Tuesday, and will entertain at a dance for the officers on Thursday, March 31.

Capt. F. C. Bradley, the British Naval Attache, accompanied by Commander W. S. Popham, U. S. N., will go aboard the cruiser at 2 o'clock on Monday. At 3 o'clock Rear Admiral George Pettengill will "call" upon Vice Admiral Meyrick. Then at 3:45 Vice Admiral Meyrick will "call" upon Admiral Pettengill.

At 4:15 the British skipper will pay his respects to Commissioner Hazen at the District Building, and from 5 to 7 Admiral and Mrs. Pettengill will give their "at home" party for the visitors at the Navy Yard.

On Tuesday morning Vice Admiral Meyrick will visit Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of War, and Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff. Others with whom he will chat officially in the course of the day include Secretary of the Navy Claude A. Swanson, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison and Admiral Leahy. Mrs. Seton Completes Book of Travels Based on Expedition to Indo-China

Noted Woman Explorer Here Visiting Mrs. Dorothy Watson.

Plans Second Work, Recounting Adventures in Philippines.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Bats, pythons, tigers and half-trained elephants, paraded across an interview yesterday with Grace Thompson Seton, world renowned author and explorer, who is spending a few days here as the guest of Mrs. Dorothy DeMuth Watson. She will return to Washington again in April from her home in Greenwich, Conn., for the biennial convention of the National League of American Pen Women which she served as president for two terms. Mrs. Watson is chairman of the Book Fair for the convention.

Mrs. Seton recently completed her latest book, based on her adventures in Indo-China, where she went five years ago, penetrating the interior where no white woman had been before her. The story of her experiences will come out in the fall, and she is now working on a second book, material for which she gathered in the Philippines on the same trip.

Both, incidentally, will be published without the section devoted to the status of women in those countries, such as has been included in her former books dealing with her explorations. Within the past decade she says, publishers have shown less interest in discussion of the position of women—a trend concurrent with the "back-to-the-kitchen" movement in central Europe.

Interest in the matriarchal system, a form of which survives in Indo-China, was responsible for her study of the Mois there. She went into the interior with a man who was an opium easter, the only one the American consul could recommend as an interpreter. She traveled by rail as far as the railroad extended, from there by motor and then took to the back of half-trained elephants. These great beasts were a contrast to the dependable Indian elephants, she said, and riding on them was neither so safe nor so comfortable.

The discomfort and danger were somewhat compensated for by the beauties of the jungles through which they went. There were peacocks and silver pheasant, and orchids of all varieties dripping from the trees.

She found the natives living in little huts, built on poles 10 feet above the ground — protection from the tigers which prowled below at night. The people appeared friendly, but she knew that at any moment they might nonchalantly shoot one of their poisoned arrows through her or a member of her party.

The story of her adventures would have been written long ago —by this time would have been well known to the American public—had it not been for an illness she contracted in Indo-China, and from which it has taken her most of the five years to recover. She merely mentions this as the price she paid for material for her writing—it is the achievement of a purpose that is more important, she says.

Before embarking on her expedition to the Far East, she inquired of the Field Museum what she could do in the way of collecting for the institution. (She was historian of its expedition to Brazil in 1926). The answer was that they were "short of bats." She stopped in the Philippines to remedy the shortage and did so, adding nine specimens, eight of which were new.

A visit to the bat-infested cave of a python will be among the Philippine adventures described in the book on this part of her trip.

It was hard to associate the gracious, animated little woman telling of encounters with reptiles and wild beasts with such experiences. One account suggested another and each adventure was more breath-taking than the last. "Weren't you afraid?" was the one question I did not ask. It was evident she had no time to be—she had to think so fast to meet the situations in which she often found herself.

Turning from Mrs. Seton's explorations to her less spectacular interests, one is still on an international plane. In the summer she will go to Edinburg, Scotland, for the golden jubilee meeting of the International Council of Women, being held in honor of Lady Aberdeen, who for 40 years was its president. Mrs. Seton is vice convener of letters for the council, and in this capacity is seeking to have committees for each of the countries represented—nearly 40—make surveys of the outstanding works by women of their nations.

She has always directed her interest to the accomplishments of women—not because they are more important than those of men, but because the whole field is too vast to encompass, she says. She was responsible for the International Women Writers' Conclave in Chicago in connection with the Century of Progress exposition in 1933, to which 27 countries sent representatives and a few books by leading women. These volumes are now housed in the Deering Library and Mrs. Seton is adding to them. Her own book, "Yes, Lady Sahib," on the status of women in Egypt, is included in the section devoted to the 100 best books written by American women during the century. This collection has just been completed with the addition of Dorothea Dix's "Prison Discipline," published in 1848.

Mrs. Seton will report in Edinburgh on a survey of the works of American women durng 1937-38. This conclave will be the third, the second having been in Yugoslavia in 1936.

Mrs. Seton was decorated by the French government for her organization and direction of the Woman's Motor Unit Le Bien-Etre du Blesse during the World War; she was an organizer of the Society of Women Geographers and has countless other distinctions listed to the extent of five inches in Who's Who.

GRACE THOMPSON SETON.

Kappas to Fete Woman Jurist

A luncheon in honor of Judge Florence E. Allen, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, will begin Saturday at the Washington Hotel by Kappa Beta Pi, international sorority of which she is an honorary member.

Judge Allen, who will be the honor guest and speak at annual banquet of the Women's Bar Association Saturday evening, is the first and only woman to be appointed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. This appointment was made by President Roosevelt in 1934, when she was sitting as the first woman member of the Supreme Court of Ohio. When she was elected to that bench in 1922, she became the first woman to sit in a State court of last resort. Her early legal and judicial experience also included service as Ohio's first woman assistant county prosecutor and Ohio's first woman Common Pleas judge.

Judge Allen received her A. B. degree from Western Reserve University in 1904, at the age of 20, when she also was honored with a Phi Beta Kappa key. In 1908, she received her A. M. in political science from Western Reserve. Because Ohio had no law schools to which women were admitted, when she commenced the study of law she attended the University of Chicago Law School for two years, where she was the only woman in a class of more than 100. She then transferred to New York University Law School, where she received her LL. B. with highest honors in 1913.

In 1928 she was named by the National Federation of Business and Professional Women as the leading professional woman in America.

Judge Ellen K. Ready, of the Municipal Court of the District of Columbia, will be one of the prominent members of Kappa Beta Pi to welcome Judge Allen to Washington. Miss Elizabeth F. Reed, grand dean; Mrs. Grace Brown Stiles, grand registrar, and Miss Marguerite Rawalt, province director, also will be present.

50 Ames Alumni Sing at Banquet

Fifty members of the alumni association of the Iowa State College at Ames gathered last night for a dinner and program at Wesley Hall.

Pursuing a new plan inaugurated this year, the association, instead of inviting noted persons to address its meetings, is finding its speakers from among those in its membership who hold unusual positions in the Government. Last night Miss Harriet Eyres, assistant manager of the Department of Justice cafeteria, told how cafeterias serving Government workers are operated. The other speaker on the program was Col. Rush B. Lincoln, who told some of his army experiences.

Singing at the dinner was led by another member of the association, Miss Helen Green, who sings at the King Cole Room. Robert C. Hibben, president of the organization, presided.

The Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A Wallace, and Undersecretary M. L. Wilson, both alumni of the college, who had been expected to attend, were unable to be present. Dr. C. W. Warburton, director of the Federal-State co-operative extension service was among the guests, as was Dr. Carleton R. Ball, of the Department of Agriculture.

Mrs. Margaret Noble Savin is secretary of the association and the program committee includes Russell Engberg, chairman; L. R. Ender and Fred J. Rossiter.

Delphians to Meet.

Columbia Chapter of the Delphian Society will meet in the conference room at Woodward & Lothrop's next Thursday at 10 a. m. It is the fifteenth program with Mrs. Norris as the leader. The subject for discussion is "Through Industrial Revolution and Nationalism to World War."

Marie Sullivan, Airline Executive, Finds New Thrills on Senate Subway While Here

The Senate subway provided new thrills yesterday for Miss Marie Sullivan, director of the women's department of Eastern Air Lines, who has flown 250,000 miles in the last three years and fails to get excited when she's up in the air. She was a guest at luncheon yesterday of Miss Earlene White, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, who entertained her in the Senate dining room.

Miss Sullivan belongs to the New York city B. and P. W. and has the distinction of being the only woman in the country in full charge of a similar department for an air line. Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, who heads the company she represents, was the first to put a woman in an executive position.

Miss Sullivan believes there is a growing field for women in the department she represents, in food, interior decorating and advertising for air lines. They know best how to cater to women passengers, she said, but she is of the opinion air hostesses will soon be replaced on all airlines by men stewards. They should not be porters, she believes.

There has been an increase from 5 per cent to 30 per cent in women passengers on planes in the past three years, and 2,500 women flew to South America during January this year, most of them North Americans, she said.

Miss Sullivan is a member of the advisory committee on aviation for the New York World's Fair, as well as a member of the women's committee. The aviation building will be the most interesting in the transportation group, she stated, and all exhibits will be educational.

She came here from Miami, where she has been for the past two weeks on business, and has just completed a tour of 21 cities served by her company.

Shoppers' Club Celebrates Its First Birthday

80 Women Observe Anniversary of Women's League Here.

A year's growth has made almost a precocious child of one of Washington's youngest organizations, the League of Women Shoppers, it was indicated yesterday in reports of its spectacular achievements given at the meeting observing its first birthday. The session, attended by about 80 members, was held in the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women, where the League was started last spring.

The organization, of which Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler Colman is president, during its short life, has acted in support of labor in eleven strikes, in four of which members assisted the strikers in picketing; has conducted research in living costs of low income workers and submitted the findings to District Minimum Wage Board Conferences, and inaugurated a local boycott against the use of silk imported from Japan, staging a large fashion show to popularize the idea of buying other fabrics. The fashion show attracted such wide attention, a group of silk workers from Pennsylvania came to the Capital and paraded in protest.

Yesterday's report on the league's co-operation with labor in strike situations showed its assistance had been effective.

* * * *

The organization, whose founders were Miss Mary Taylor, who had been a member of the New York City League before coming to Washington, and Mrs. Robert Horton, has grown within the year from 60 members to 400. Offices have been maintained since last fall in the National Press Building with Mrs. Charles Collier as secretary and Miss Rose Salner, assistant secretary. It is one of 18 leagues now established in various sections of the country and Miss Kathleen McInerney, executive secretary of the New York group, who was here yesterday, announced plans to organize nationally.

Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, who is among the prominent women sponsoring the local league, addressed the meeting, commending the organization for its effectiveness in bringing about practical results. The league, she said, is raising the flag to show that housewives can have a voice that counts in this country.

* * * *

A questionnaire was distributed among the members to determine their attitude on action in several fields. These include support of labor in disputes of various kinds; legislation in the labor field; defense of civil liberties; action on international affairs, including a stand such as was taken regarding the boycott, and support of consumer co-operatives.

Mrs. Thomas Blaisdell reported on minimum wage hearings at which she was one of three consumer representatives, Miss Frances Rice and Mrs. Mildred Burk, on the work of the labor standards committee of which they are chairman and cochairman; Mrs. Claire Bloomberg reported for Mrs. Mordecai Exekiel, chairman of the investigating committee and Florence DeHaas Denbitz on action taken as a stockholder in a chain store, in an effort to have the management meet the demands of strikers in Washington stores.

WHAT'S MORE EXCITING than moving into a new school building? Moving in on new playgrounds is the answer of pupils of Lafayette School in Chevy Chase.

The Lafayette Parent-Teacher Association has been hard at work all season, co-operating with the principal, Miss Margaret Pepper, in finding ways and means of providing recreational facilities for the children on the 10 acres adjoining the school. The new building will be ready for occupancy next month and so will four new tennis courts, a baseball diamond, and a garden plot.

The garden site will be plowed as soon as workmen's sheds have been removed with the completion of the new building, and then all the classes, from the first grade through the sixth, will have a chance to plant things and watch them grow. Miss Esther Scott is the garden supervisor for the District schools.

Another section of the school grounds, which is a wooded area, will be used for nature study projects.

The parents of Lafayette P.-T. A. are as excited as the children over the prospect of the new school and the use of the grounds. McLean Smith is president of the P.-T. A. and W. H. Lorrimer chairman of the committee which has been promoting the playground project.

Expert Urges Building Tax on Cubic Contents

Minneapolis Inspector Addresses Conference of Officials Here.

Louis C. Closuing, Minneapolis building inspector, told more than 100 delegates to the Building Officials conference yesterday that construction taxes should be based upon a building's cubical contents.

Speaking at the Willar Hotel at the second sesson of the five-day conference, Closuing declared "a city's building inspection service is a necessary public service to the community at large as much as a health department for which a budget is set up as far as the department is concerned."

Other speakers at yesterday's session included Corporation Counsel Elwood Seal, Representative William M. Citron, of Connectcut, and culture Department division of for-George W. Trayer, chief of the Agriest products research. Motion pictures were presented by the Underwriters Laboratories, Inc., and the American Institute of Steel Construction.

Program for today includes addresses by Howard P. Virmilya, Federal Housing Administration official, and Carl R. Shedler, Labor Department official. A stag party at the hotel will account for the evening's entertainment. Delegates will make a tour of Government bureaus tomorrow and conclude activities with a banquet in the Willard ballroom at 8 p. m.

AMONG US DICTATORS

(An imaginary chat—if the love feast in Rome comes off.)

BENITO: They say you're a little taller than I am . . . Let's measure.

ADOLF: Certainly, Shorty . . . Us rangy Nordics——

BENITO (reluctantly): You've got me a shade, 5 feet 4½ to 5 feet 3¾ . . . It's your high heels . . . Welcome to Rome.

* * * *

Princess Maria. . . . lovely girl

ADOLF: You have certainly got this place plastered with busts of yourself!

BENITO: Yes, the boys seem to like to have 'em around; think they're ornamental.

ADOLF: My mustache does not register so well in white marble . . . We go in more for big photographs of me in Berlin.

* * * *

BENITO: Notice my resemblance for Napoleon and Caesar?

ADOLF: . . . Er——, yes; merkwirdig, isn't it? And George Washington?

BENITO: Huh, that democrat? They tell me my busts resemble Alexander the Great, too.

* * * *

ADOLF: Maybe I could have a bust done with my mustache inlaid in black marble . . .

BENITO: A surprise for you: Here it is!

ADOLF: Oh, gorgeous, gorgeous! Thanks, lieber Benito . . . I'll have my Minister of Public Enlightenment strike off 100,000 copies.

"—Hitler by a heel"

BENITO: How's your digestion standing up under this dictator racket?

ADOLF: Not bad, so long as ich bleib strictly vegetarian . . . But I nibble only one bite of blutwurst . . .

BENITO: I can eat anything I like; don't even need to take it out of the can.

* * * *

ADOLF: Do you ever wake up wondering where you are and how come?

BENITO: Once in a while . . . I sit in bed bewildered in the morning, trying to remember . . . Then I see those busts of me——

ADOLF: And you remember you're dictator. Same here . . . I have a big enlarged photo on each wall, with "Fuehrer" on 'em in large letters.

* * * *

BENITO: You mean the one where 900,000 Nordics are heiling you, eh? . . . Do you still look under your bed at night?

ADOLF: Yes, and under the chests, too; the other night I found an egg beater and a turtle.

BENITO: Some wise guy—liberal, probably—trying to kid you . . . How much longer can we spoof the English about this all-for-one and one-for-all stuff?

"—mustache in black marble"

ADOLF: Maybe we'd better have our pictures taken arms-around-the-neck . . .

BENITO: They mustn't know that our axis is half-buried.

ADOLF: What do you mean, half-buried? You wouldn't get mad about a teeny-weeny little country like Austria? Come on, let's wave our axis!

* * * *

BENITO: We must keep up the bluff, even if we look like a pair of phoneys to the English and Americans.

ADOLF: You can take Greece or Egypt or a piece of Spain. Bah, the English and Americans have no guts.

BENITO: While you keep Austria? . . . My ambassador tells me Washington doesn't like all this . . . What would you do if London sent some ships toward Hamburg?

* * * *

ADOLF: They wouldn't be so rude . . . But I can always tell 'em a nice white lie.

BENITO (musing to himself): I wonder which side I and Italy could take . . . This guy is beginning to think HE is Napoleon!

ADOLF: Well, we haven't anything to lose; maybe a few soldiers . . . Let's get those pictures taken.

BENITO: By the way, when are you getting married? My King's daughter Maria is a fine girl——

ADOLF: Das Vaterland is my bride.

Ban on GHA Admitted by D. C. Society

Medical Association's Strict 'No Comment' Policy Ends.

Ending a strict "no comment" policy which had been in force since its expulsion of a Group Health Association physician last Wednesday, the District Medical Society yesterday formally admitted it forbids members to act as consultants to GHA doctors.

Almost simultaneously, a member of Congress warned he will ask revocation of the society's charter if it continues to pursue such a practice.

Taking the House floor for his second defense of Group Health Association within a week, Representative Scott (Democrat), of California, also charged the society with coercing local hospitals into refusing to admit GHA doctors and said:

"Unless the District Medical Society stops this discrimination I am going to introduce a resolution to revoke its charter.

"It's about time Congress, which has complete control of the District, finds out whether any citizen can get treatment in Washington hospitals regardless of whether or not he belongs to a group health association."

Replies to Protest.

Replying to a protest by W. C. Kirkpatrick, GHA president, on the society's refusal to sanction consultation privileges, Dr. Thomas E. Neill, president, said:

"In view of the statements contained in your letter, and the wide publicity given to it in the public press, it is obvious that the primary purpose of your communication is to create in the public mind an erroneous impression as to the attitude of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia and the members thereof in rendering medical aid to the community in general."

Reviewing the case at issue, involving a G. H. A. client who was unable to obtain the services of an outside heart specialist through the association, Dr. Neill said he advised the specialist against working with Dr. Richard H. Price, the G. H. A. physician, because the society's constitution provides that:

"No member of the society shall engage in any professional capacity whatsoever with any organization, group or individual, by whatever name called or however organized, engaged in the practice of medicine within the District of Columbia or within 10 miles thereof, which has not been approved by the society."

"Couldn't See Patient."

"I am advised," Dr. Neill told Kirkpatrick, "that the consultant informed Dr. Price that while he could not see the patient in consultation, nevertheless, he would gladly see the patient independently and render whatever medical service might be needed.

"Agreeable to the wishes of the patient, the consultant called upon him, made a diagnosis and gave advice as to treatment, all of which was communicated to Dr. Price. A frank and fair disclosure of the facts clearly indicates that the best interests of the patient (suffering from coronary thrombosis) were in every respect safeguarded and in no wise did he suffer any detriment."

Dr. Neill charged that G. H. A. is practicing medicine in violation of the healing arts practice act passed by Congress and therefore "it has not, and can not, be approved by the Medical Society as a proper organization in the practice of medicine in this District."

"Notwithstanding the fact that the United States District Attorney has ruled that the Group Health Association is engaged in the practice of medicine in violation of the law, nevertheless, it has persisted in the continuance of this illegal practice," Dr. Neill asserted.

"Binding on Members."

"The constitution of the Medical Society is binding upon its members, and as president of the society I am obligated, when called upon, to advise the members of the society that the provisions of its constitution are mandatory and must be adhered to."

He reminded Kirkpatrick he has no authority to suspend provisions of the society's constitution and as long as G. H. A. "persists in the practice of medicine in violation of law" it is his bounden duty to advise society members they must not consult professionally with "hired agents" of Group Health Association.

On the other hand, Representative Scott charged the medical body's tactics are "highly improper," endangering the lives of Government employes and their families.

He cited the experience of a Government secretary who was admitted to a local hospital and placed on an operating table before the superintendent decided that she could not be attended by the GHA physician who had sent her to the hospital.

Meantime, Jacob Baker, president of the United Federal Workers of America, appealed yesterday to the American Medical Association to show "a kindlier and more responsive attitude to the forward looking organizations designed to provide more medical service for more people."

13 G. W. U. Students to Receive Phi Beta Kappa Keys April 12

Professor Hennings Explains Basis of Selection of First Group Honored by New Chapter of Fraternity.

Thirteen George Washington University students, recently elected to Phi Beta Kappa, will receive keys, symbolic of the national honorary society, at initiation ceremonies April 12.

These students constitute the first group to be elected to the new university chapter which was installed here on February 22. They are: Thomas Ransel Brooks, 1835 K street; George Robbins Brown, 5303 Forty-first street, northwest; Edwin Menton Cage, 3622 Norton place, northwest; Preston Ercelle Cloud, Waynesboro, Pa.; Earl Eli Eisenhart, 4006 Illinois avenue, northwest; Beverly Agnes Emmert, 4504 Fifteenth street, northwest; Richard Castleman Evans, 4408 Greenwich parkway; Jack Rodney Harlan, 5329 Forty-second place, northwest; Mark Hummer Lepper, Seven Oaks, Silver Spring, Md.; Laura Emily Phillips, 7003 Clarendon place, Edgemoor, Md.; William Theodore Pierson, 3621 Newark street, northwest; Alice Babette West, 3841 Harrison street, northwest; and Charles Wise, Jr., 1629 L street, northwest.

In announcing the elections, Prof. George N. Hennings, president of the chapter, said "election was by no means based solely upon the attainment of high grades in courses, though only students with a quality-point index of 3.5 or higher (a scholastic average midway between B and A) were elected. From the list of eligibles final selection was made on the basis of evidence of creative mental powers, character, and indications of future intellectual and cultural distinction and social usefulness. In reaching its conclusions, the chapter not only examined minutely and repeatedly all scholastic records but solicited advice of all faculty members who had come in contact with the students."

Montgomery Loan Finances Studied

Investigation of the financial status of the Montgomery Building & Loan Association was begun by A. Leftwich Sinclair, auditor of the District Court, in a hearing yesterday to determine if the institution should be dissolved and its major assets sold to the Perpetual Building Association.

The Montgomery petitioned for dissolution several weeks ago, and Justice Bailey ordered a hearing on financial responsibility of the group. At that time it was claimed the institution was solvent but lacked working capital. Its assets were valued at $567,355 and its liabilities at $563,063.

Boy Drowns in Upper Channel; Youth Periled Trying Rescue

Unidentified Woman Ends Own Life in Shallow Water of Basin.

Rescue efforts of Fred Satterwaite, 16, of 216 Indiana avenue northwest, yesterday failed to save 13-year-old Albert Smith, colored, of 433 H street northwest, from drowning in the upper end of the Washington Channel.

Smith, playing with three other friends, paddled alone 100 feet from shore in an old skiff which sank. Satterwaite saw him floundering, swam to his rescue, but was nearly drowned himself when the colored boy grabbed him by the neck.

Smith sank before he could be pulled out. His body was recovered 20 minutes later by the Harbor Police. The Rescue Squad tried artificial respiration without success. The body was taken to the morgue.

An unidentified colored woman also drowned early yesterday in the Tidal Basin near the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Clad in a green costume, she jumped into the shallow water and held her head under until drowned. Her body was taken to the morgue.

Larger Staff Held Vital to D. C. Prisons

Parole, Probation Units Handicapped, Newest Report Says.

Administration of parole and probation systems in the District, "indispensable parts of any modern correctional system," is handicapped by serious lack of personnel, the Prison Industries Reorganization Administration reported yesterday.

"Probation, so administered," the administration said in making public the third part of its study of the District's prison problem, "is little more than clemency, instead of being a form of correctional treatment, as it should be."

Also, because of personnel shortage, "the difficulty of securing employment for the men is one of the most serious problems confronting parole authorities," the report said.

Integrated System Urged.

An integrated penal system for the District was urged in the second part of the study made public yesterday morning. "Besides overcrowding and the need for more housing facilities," the report stated, "the most acute problems concern the organization of the penal system, classification work, cutting down the high turnover among short-term prisoners, provision of medical care, methods of dealing with chronic alcoholism, finding more work for inmates, developing a training program and raising the standards for personnel."

"Probation serves to keep out of prison offenders who can safely be retained in the community," the administration headed by Dr. Louis N. Robinson said.

"Parole, on the other hand, affords a means of transition from the unnatural restrictions of prison life to the free life of the community—a method of keeping released prisoners under close supervision until they have had a chance to adjust themselves and have demonstrated their ability to keep out of trouble. And the best supervision costs far less than it takes to house and guard a man in prison.

District Not Willing.

"The District, however, has not yet been willing to pay for enough personnel to obtain first-class probation and parole service."

The District Juvenile and Police courts all have probation departments "so understaffed that they cannot possibly give their cases real supervision or conduct thorough pre-sentence investigations to provide the judges with adequate material for probate decisions," the report said.

On July 1, 1937, there were six District Court probation officers to handle 800 probationers—and clerical work took the full time of four of these officers and left only two for field work," the report stated.

"By accepted probation standards, no case workers should carry a load of more than 50 unless the bulk of the work consists of making collections.

"A similar situation exists in Police Court, where the probationer reports to the office weekly or monthly and 'supervision' is necessarily limited to a brief question or two. Yet the Police Court should be one of the strategic places for an attack upon crime, since many men picked up for trivial offenses are just beginning a delinquent career and can be stopped if they receive some assistance in meeting their difficulties."

Only Six Officers.

Before the first of the year, when another was added, there were only five probation officers at Police Court. Their times was taken up mostly by clerical work, the report said. During the first ten months of 1937 there were 844 persons given probation, at the rate of 1,000 a year. In 1936 there were 62,065 cases heard, in which there were mostly convictions.

"As for the Juvenile Court," the report said, "on June 30, 1937, there were 1,262 defendants on probation in the adult division—an average of 316 for each of the four officers."

The District is "fortunate in having on its Parole Board men of outstanding qualifications and high standing," the report said.

"During the last fiscal year, favorable action was taken on 259 out of 510 applications for parole, or 51 per cent. But even if parole is granted, a man cannot go out unless he has a suitable place to live and a job approved by the board.

"And when jobs are scarce anyway, a prisoner waiting for parole has small chance of landing anything. Men who go out on conditional release are interviewed by the parole staff, but they have to try and find jobs for themselves."

The parole staff, aside from the unpaid board, includes a parole executive, three field officers and two stenographers. At Lorton Reformatory there is an institutional parole officer with inmate clerical help.

Vandenberg Gets His Birthday Wish

Senator Arthur Vandenberg, who celebrated his fifty-fourth birthday yesterday, proudly announced he had received "the one gift" he wanted. His daughter, Betty, an accomplished pianist, appeared at a musicale which Mrs. Vandenberg gave in her husband's honor. The family group is shown at home.

A. A. Clemons Wanted His Heart Pierced to Make Death Certain

Apparently Feared Being Buried Alive; Will Filed Here Gives Art to Friends and Wealth to Harvard.

Apparently in fear of being buried alive, Albert Adsit Clemons, formerly of 3400 Prospect avenue northwest, provided in his will that "upon my death having been definitely determined, the attending physician shall pierce or puncture my heart sufficiently for the purpose of absolute certainty of death."

This was learned in District Court yesterday when his will was filed. It did not disclose whether the physician who attended Clemons on his death bed carried out the instructions of the will and pierced the heart.

The will directed that all works of art possessed by the deceased be given to friends, and that the bulk of the estate be given to Harvard University.

Mrs. Elizabeth W. Clemons, the widow, who was reported out of town yesterday, received no bequests. The will explained that she had been amply provided for.

Until the petition for the probate of the will is filed there is no estimate of the value of the estate. Attorneys associated with the estate declined last night to give any idea of what the estate was worth or how much the university would receive.

The spacious mansion at 3400 Prospect avenue was once the home of Benjamin Stoddert, first Secretary of the Navy.

After purchasing the 155-year-old home, Clemons had the entire front remodeled and proceeded to convert it into a museum.

Police Boys Club Auxiliary Raises $600 in Campaign

Mrs. John Allen Daugherty, chairman of the Women's Auxiliary of the Metropolitan Police Boys' Club, yesterday presented a check for $600 to the club at the second get-together luncheon of campaign workers endeavoring to raise $75,000 for the club in 1938.

The sum, Mrs. Daugherty said, represented money contributed from many sources. Others who spoke included Maj. Ernest W. Brown, founder of the Club; Maj. Robert A. McClure, vice president in charge of membership, and L. Gordon Leech, campaign director.

James E. Colliflower, president of the club, will speak tomorrow, when a campaign luncheon is held at the Carlton Hotel.

Child's Skull Fractured When Trolley Hits Her

Three-year-old Alice Cockrill, colored, of 1765 Willard street northwest, was in critical condition at Children's Hospital last night after being struck by a street car at Seventeenth and U streets northwest. She received a fractured skull, fractured cheek bone and other injuries.

Police said the street car was operated by John R. Ott, 43, of 206 Eleventh street southeast. No charge was made.

Knocked from his motorcycle by a taxicab in the 4300 block of Connecticut avenue, Private J. T. Durkin, of Eighth Precinct, arrested Milton Brandon, 32, of 739 Newton street northwest, on a charge of reckless driving, then sought treatment at Emergency Hospital for cuts and bruises. His motorcycle was demolished.

Dr. Rollins to Speak.

The Very Rev. Wallace E. Rollins, D. D., dean of the Episcopal Theological Seminary in Alexandria, Va., will speak at midweek Lenten services tonight in St. John's Episcopl Church, Sixteenth and H streets northwest. The service is at 8 p. m.

Girls, Bosses Clash at Pay Conference

Dry Cleaning, Laundry Parley Rows Over Room Rent.

Embattled labor and employer representatives clashed yesterday at the wage conference hearings which will set a basic wage for women employed in the dry cleaning and laundry industries.

The item of room rents caused quick across-the-table outbursts from both labor and employer representatives.

Samuel Rubenstein, one of the three employer representatives on the conference, insisted that employe questioners of witnesses "refrain from using leading questions," as Inez Robinson, colored, former laundry employe, was being questioned by Arthur L. Schoenthal, labor representative on the Minimum Wage Board.

Defends Tactics.

Schoenthal defended his tactics, stating, "I do this because we have not had a chance to rehearse our witnesses." Clarence Phelps Dodge, chairman of the conference, interjected a firm "Gentlemen, please!"

Miss Robinson stated it was impossible to find a single room for less than $4 a week. Employes have asked for $5 a week for room. Employers have combined room and board, estimating $7.50 per week should cover both items.

J. P. Moran, of the Moran Research Bureau, testified there were 788 rooms available at $2 and $3 a week.

Moran said case workers were paid 3 cents a day for each room they could find which rented for $3 a week. One of the case workers, Miss Marion Geddes, located 112 rooms under that arrangement. She stated the rooms were "decent and clean and very desirable to live in." Another investigator, Miss Belle Steele, colored, inspected 348 rooms, some of which could be rented "for as low as $2."

Six Days—348 Rooms.

She was asked how many days it required to investigate 348 rooms. Six days, was the reply. When asked if she investigated "all of these rooms personally," she admitted she hadn't, but had taken the list from a local rental agent.

Two other case workers, both Howard University students, hired by Moran,, stated they had found no rooms at those prices, but said they "hadn't tried very hard." One of the investigators, Miss Suzanne Cook, stated she had done some work along these lines for the Alley Dwelling Authority, and "knew that I couldn't find this type of room, so I didn't even try." Wilson Williams, who worked for the agency several days, stated he was unable to find "fit rooms for $2 or $3 a week."

He said later, however, that he had found several rooms in the $3 group, "but I considered these rooms to be in a bad neighborhood when I saw a man chasing a woman down the street in front of the house, cursing."

Workers last night ridiculed budget items submitted to the board at a meeting held in the Garnet-Patterson auditorium. A light coat, costing $5.40, they said, would not last three seasons because it would not stand the first cleaning.

More than a hundred women lept to their feet in protest when the wage board representative presented them their budget requirements for hats, as prepared by the employers, which allowed two hats a year at 94 cents each. Doubt was expressed they could get along on their own proposals, three hats a year, two at $1.95 and one at $1.25 for work purposes.

Walper, Partner Win Pro-Amateur Play at Pinehurst

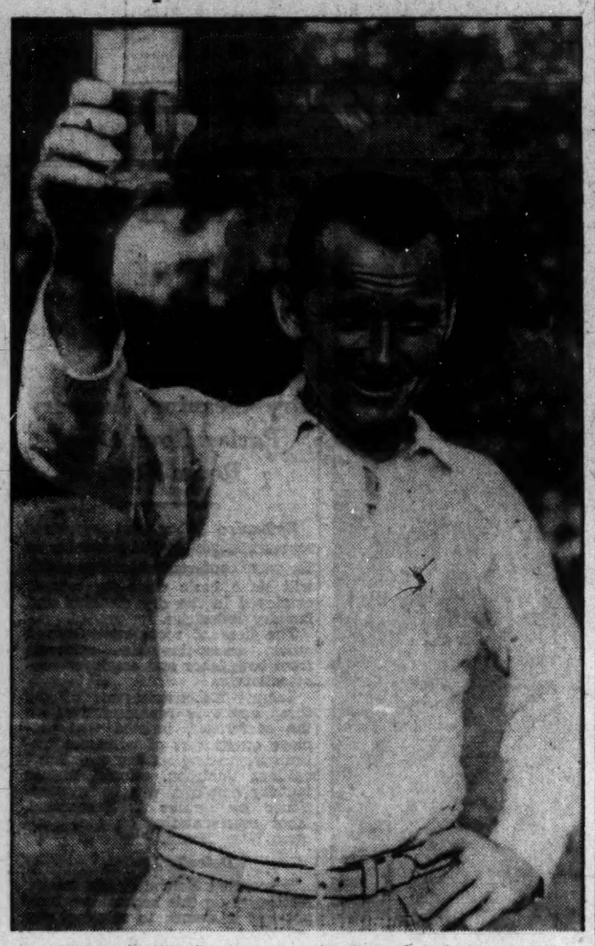
Nats Drop 6-3 Decision to Cincinnati Reds

Walper Drinks Toast to Self



Leo Walper, Washington pro, who with F. Paul Anderson yesterday won the pro-amateur event at Pinehurst, N. C., was recently expelled from the P. G. A. but the ouster doesn't seem to have upset him. This photo was taken after Walper had taken the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. championship at Old Point Comfort last fall.

Leo Walper, Partner Win At Pinehurst

D. C. Pro Enters North-South Event Today as Favorite.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 22.—Leo Walper, who only yesterday was expelled from the National and Middle Atlantic Golfers Associations, apparently is unperturbed, for the former Bethesda, Md., driving range pro played sub par golf here today to capture the North and South amateur-pro championships.

Teaming with F. Paul Anderson, former New Jersey State champion, Walper posted a best ball score of 64 to win the annual tournament by a single stroke. His individual score of 67 equaled the course record for the Pinehurst No. 2 championship layout.

Walper and Anderson played brilliantly as a team, failing to earn par or better on only three holes. Meanwhile Walper bagged two eagles and four birdies, Anderson three birdies. Both of Walper's eagles were the results of lengthy putts after he had reached the green in two strokes.

Because of his unexpected victory, Walper tomorrow will enter the first round of the thirty-sixth annual North and South Pinehurst open championship as a ranking favorite. Disregarding the superstition that new clubs retard one's golf game evidently had something to do with Walper's victory, for he bought a new set the day before the pro-amateurs.

Behind Walper and Anderson were the teams of Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y., and J. Barbour, Morristown, N. J.; Mike Turnesa, Elmsford, N. Y., and Dick Chapman, Greenwich, Conn., with 65s. Walper received $100 for winning, his partner was given a large trophy, while the tying combinations split second and third place money.

Wiffy Cox, another Washingtonian, playing with Frank Strafaci, former National Public Links titlist, tied at 67s with three other teams for third place. These were Stanley Horner, Canada, and Ross Somerville, 1932 National Amateur champion; Tony Penna, Chicago, and Maury Fitzgerald, Washington, D. C.; Harry Cooper, Chicago, and Jim Hunter, Pittsfield, Mass.

Following with 68s were Frank Moore, New York, and Bobby Dunkelberger, Durham, recent winner of the St. Augustine National Amateur-Pro event; Tommy Armour, Chicago, and Tommy Walker, a 1938 Walker Cup team selection, and Joe Stein, Boston, and T. Scoefield, Pinehurst.

In tomorrow's play Walper is scheduled to leave the tee at 9:45 a. m. in company with Richard Chapman, New York amatuer, and Ed Bush, Norwich, Me.

Mrs. Jameson Tied With Miss Verry in Play at Southern Pines.

By the Associated Press.

Southern Pines, N. C., March 22. Patty Berg, of Minneapolis, Minn., turned in a 38, 37—75 today in leading a field of 60 women golfers in the Mid-South Tournament at the end of the first 18-hole round of the 54-hole medal meet.

Deadlocked for second place were Mrs. Jane Cothran Jameson, of West Palm Beach, Fla., and Deborah Verry, of Worcester, Mass., 1936 titlist, with 80's.

Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, National Women's champion and defending titlist, shot a sparkling 38 going out, but ran into trouble on the thirteenth hole and finished with an 83. One stroke behind was Syracuse's blonde Virginia Guilfoil who, although unfamiliar with the course, carded an 84.

Mrs. Page and Miss Berg toured the first nine in 38's, but the North Carolinian lost out when her ball landed in stubbled grass on a bunker near the thirteenth. Her recovery cost ten strokes.

Mrs. Jameson went out in 37, but she, too, got into trouble on the incoming nine.

Davis Hits Homer; Nats' Attack Weak

Hollingsworth Pitches Great Ball in Six Mound Sessions.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 22.—The Nats turned in another sour performance in the Grapefruit League today and were slapped down by the Cincinnati Reds. The score was 6 to 3.

The Red who was chiefly responsible for the overthrow of Washington was a tall, willowly left-winger named Al Hollingsworth. It was a six-inning purge that Hollingsworth conducted. The Nats didn't get a run or their third hit until the seventh, after Hollingsworth retired.

The Reds weren't exactly a murderous crew at bat ether, collecting only seven hits as did the Nats, but they were much more discreet about it. For example, the first hit they made accounted for three runs. It was a screaming homer off the bat of Catcher Virgil Davis in the second inning.

Ferrell divided the pitching with Jimmy DeShong and Pete Appleton and, of the trio, only DeShong was able to hold the Reds runless. The Nats bestirred themselves in the seventh against the right-handed Ray Davis, Hollingsworth's successor, and scored two runs. They narrowed the Red's lead to 4-3 in the eighth, but Pete Appleton promptly pitched two more runs back at the Reds.

Ferrell Blows Up.

The National Leaguers weren't trifling much with singles this afternoon. Only two of their hits were of that variety. They whacked out three triples, a home run and a double.

Ferrell was doing very well for one and two-third innings. In fact the big right-hander was perfect, not a Red reaching base. And then the ball game blew up in his face. He walked Riggs and Myers, and the veteran Davis blasted the next pitch far, far over the hedges that serve as the leftfield fence.

Ferrell allowed only two hits in his three-inning turn, but the second was a triple by Dusty Cooke, former Yankee, former Red Sox, former Minneapolis veteran, which led to another run in the third inning. When Ferrell turned the pitching over to DeShong, the Reds were a futile crew. McCormick's triple was the only blow permitted by DeShong.

But the Nats were having a horrible time of it against Hollingsworth. Simmons thumped a single into center field in the first inning and Almada beat out a bunt in the fifth and that's all the liberties the Red southpaw allowed. He turned a 4-1 lead over to Davis.

Travis Gets Triple.

Right off the bat the Nats began to bang Davis in the seventh. Pete Appleton, whose hitting has been far superior to his pitching thus far, whacked a single to center, Almada drew a walk, Myer singled to right, Simmons singled to center and the Nats had two runs. They picked up another in the third when Cecil Travis whaled the daylights out of a pitch to send a triple into deep rightfield.

But whatever notions the Nats had of winning the ball game evaporated in the ninth when Riggs, Texas Leaguer fell in short center for a fluke double. Virgil Davis scored Riggs with a single to right and George Davis scored Virgil with a three-bagger into the hedges.

That's the way things were going for the Nats today.

Al Simmons, who collected two of the Nats' seven hits or, roughly, 28 per cent, was batting in tough luck nevertheless. The safeties he did get were well-pasted singles over second, but he hit three other balls harder—all line drives into the mitt of alert Fielder George Davis.

The Davis clan was well represented in the Reds' line-up. There was George in leftfield and Virgil behind the bat, and when Hollingsworth left the mound who should arrive as his successor but Ray Davis. Ferrell, DeShong and Appleton were pitching to a Davis all afternoon.

League President Will Harridge and Public Relations Man Henry Pierpoint Edwards and their wives were the guests of Clark Griffith in his private box.

Tomorrow the Nats will be host to the Detroit Tigers, who licked 'em, 13-0, at Lakeland the other day. Monte Weaver, Elon Hogsett and Ray Phebus will be pitching for Washington.

This Morning

A Housefly Started Zeke to Nats.

By Shirley Povich.
Orlando, Fla., March 22.

Gather about, my chickadees, and don't interrupt and you shall hear how a common housefly, perched on the nose of Manager Jimmy Dykes, started a long chain of circumstances that ended with the trade of First Baseman Henry Joseph (Zeke) Bonura to the Washington ball club.

POVICH.

It was a July day in Detroit not so many years ago—last year in fact—and the Chicago White Sox were playing the Tigers, and it was the ninth inning and the score was tied at 2-2 and Tommy Bridges was pitching for Detroit—and Bonura was on third base with the potential winning run.

Now we must digress a bit. We must remind you that when Bonura is in his little trundle bed at night and is asleep, he is fast asleep, but he is not fast at any other time. In fact, Bonura is a bit on the slow side as the speed of ball players is rated. So, getting back to that situation at Detroit that July day in 1937, the thought farthest from the mind of the Detroit club was that big-legged 210-pound Bonura would steal home, or even make the attempt.

Now remember, we were telling you that Tommy Bridges was pitching for the Tigers, and Bridges, you may or may not know, is an old hand at the pitching business. No base runner, much less Bonura, is going to steal home on Bridges, or even make the attempt, if he is sound of mind. But Bonura, who is a very unpredictable fellow, did.

Signals Crossed.

And Bridges was startled just enough by the suddenness and brashness of Bonura's act that he froze to the ball he had in his hand and when he recovered his sense of propriety there was big Bonura hot-footing it down the line toward the plate. And Bonura made it before Bridges could stir himself out of his lapse, and Chicago won the ball game.

"Nice work, Zeke," said Manager Dykes as Bonura, after disentangling himself from the Detroit catcher, strode back to the Chicago dugout with a slight limp. "Nice work Zeke," repeated Dykes, "that's the first time you ever stole home for the White Sox in four years, but you picked a nice spot for it."

Thereupon, my little dumplings, big Zeke went modest.

"Aw shucks, Jimmy, if you thought I could do it, I was willing to make a try for it," said Bonura.

"I didn't think you could do it," said Dykes.

"You didn't?" ejaculated Bonura with some surprise, "then whatinell did you give me the steal sign for?"

"Who gave you the steal sign? You're crazy," returned Dykes.

"You gave it to me, that's who," declared Bonura. "I saw you waving your scorecard from the dugout steps. That's the 'come-in' sign, you know."

Zeke Hurt on Play.

"Holy smokes, Zeke, you're right," admitted Dykes, "but I did not mean to give you the steal sign. I was tryirg to brush a fly off my nose with that scorecard!"

Well, my little patooties, if you are asking what all this has to do with the ultimate fact that Bonura was traded to Washington last week by Dykes, don't be so impatient and I'll get around to that.

You remember I was telling you that after Big Zeke crashed into that Detroit catcher the day he stole home, he walked back to the dugout with a slight limp. Well,

Boxers Vie Tonight for A.A.U. Titles

Score of Amateurs Will Compete for District Honors at Arena.

More than a score of amateur fighters resume their quest for District A. A. U. titles tonight at Turner's Arena, where the semifinals will be held, starting at 8 o'clock.

Thirty bouts, involving contestants in every division, are on the program, and firing will be at a brisk pace. Finals are scheduled Saturday night, also at the Arena.

Heading the list in the scramble for the team championship and coveted Lucien Van Doran trophy are the Merrick and Metropolitan Police Boys Clubs, with seven and eight men, respectively, qualified for the semifinals. Far down near the bottom come the National Guard standard bearers, six times champions and co-winner last year, with only two men left in the running.

Tonight may find the Guardsmen eliminated entirely, for both of their men meet clever and capable opponents. Jack Claggett, lightweight, mixes with hard-hitting Carroll Wright, and Bill Nolan, light-heavyweight, will square off with Bill Danner, of Merrick.

Other clubs with men still in the thick of fighting are Boys Club of Washington, four; Fort Myer and Fort Belvoir, two each. On the strength of its fine showing in the preliminaries, the Police team looks like the safest wager to capture the crown.

Chief interest tonight will center around the heavyweight class, wherein Jim Brady meets Andy Keady, and Don Adams tangles with Leo Miller. Brady, Golden Gloves champion, is a top-heavy favorite to win the title, and should have little difficulty with Keady, an unattached fighter. The Georgetown man appears to pack too much dynamite in his right for Keady. The latter was flattened in the first round in his last fight, falling before towering Franck Chludenski in an intercity match involving Washington and Boston.

The bantamweight bout involving Angelo Pappas, Boys Club of Washington, and Buddy Yocum, Merrick, promises to be exciting, putting it mildly. Both lads are willing mixers and have large followings—to say nothing of good righthand punches. The complete pairings:

The pairings:

112-Pound Class.
H. E. Collins (W. B. C.) vs. William Maske (Colmar Manor); Bernie Perry (Mercury A. C.) vs. Willie Tapp (Police B. C.).

118-Pound Class.
Buddy Yocum (Merrick) vs. Angelo Pappas (W. B. C.); Mike Bagdassin (W. B. C.) vs. Tony DeToto (Police B. C.).

126-Pound Class.
C. Alexander (W. B. C.) vs. Al Gray (Merrick); Charlie Arnold (Merrick) vs. O. V. Crider (Fort Belvoir).

135-Pound Class.
Joe E. Brown (Police B. C.) vs. Whitey France (Police B. C.); Jack Claggett (National Guard) vs. Carroll Wright (Police B. C.).

147-Pound Class.
John Williams (Merrick) vs. John Booher (Fort Myer); Lewis Pavonne (A. B. & W., Alexandria) vs. Glenn Drake (Police B. C.).

160-Pound Class.
William Kemp (Police B. C.) vs. Charles Maimone (Police B. C.); Charlie Cox (Merrick) vs. Ralph Harris (Fort Belvoir).

175-Pound Class.
Bill Nolan (National Guard) vs. Bill Danner (Merrick).

Heavyweight Class.
Don Adams (Maryland University) vs. Leo Miller (Fort Myer); Jim Brady (Georgetown University) vs. Andy Keady (unattached).

Michigan Boys Club Stages Boxing Show

The third series of boxing exhibitions sponsored by the Michigan Park Boys Club will be held Friday at 7:30 o'clock at 4016 Twelfth street northeast.

Ten bouts ranging from the 50 to the 100 class are scheduled.

Brouillard to Fight.

New York, March 22 (U.P.).—Lou Brouillard, of Worcester, Mass., former world welterweight and middleweight champion, makes his first start in New York in three years when he meets Gus Lesnevich, Edgewater, N. J., middleweight, in a ten-rounder tomorrow night at the Hippodrome.

Nation's Top Pros Vie in Play Today

Revolta, Cooper, Nelson Backed to Win North and South Open.

By the Associated Press.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 22.—Three sharpshooters—all of them two-time winners over the winter and spring golf grind—were red-hot favorites as a crack field prepared tonight to tee off tomorrow in the thiryt-fifth renewal of the historic North and South golf tournament.

No "book" is being made, but the resort guests who have been following the boys around will privately bet you Friday's winner will be either Johnny Revolta, the long-driving pro from Evanston, Ill.; Harry Cooper, the artist from Springfield, Mass., or Byron Nelson, of Reading, Pa., one of the up-and-coming youngsters of the professional flock.

Last year Horton Smith, former Joplin, Mo., ace, won the tournament with a score of 286, just 10 strokes under the record set by Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., in 1936. Horton is back to defend the title and seems to be shooting as well as ever, but somehow wiseacres don't give him much of a chance. Revolta, Cooper and Nelson are too hot.

Revolta was out in front in the Sacramento open with 290 and captured the classy St. Petersburg, Fla., meet with 282. Cooper won at Oakland with 275, then went on to take the New Orleans tourney with 285. Nelson was victorious both at Thomasville, Ga., with 280 and at Hollywood, Fla., with 274.

Schulte Explains 'Saps' of Coaching

Lincoln, Neb., March 22 (AP).—Henry F. Schulte, veteran University of Nebraska track coach, told the junior chamber of commerce here today there are "two kinds of saps in the coaching business."

"One sap," Schulte said, "admits he has a good team. The other kind of a sap talks about it."

Cambridge Crew Has Fast Workout

London, March 22 (AP).—The Cambridge crew, preparing for its annual race with Oxford April 2, established a new record for a part of the course today. The Cantabs pulled from Hammersmith Bridge to Chiswick Steps in 3:40, 3 seconds faster than the record made by Oxford in 1924.

Earlier the Cambridge varsity had served as pacemaker for its reserve "Goldie" crew, which rowed the full course in 20:09 training for Saturday's head of the river race.

Cunningham Will Try For New Mile Record

Los Angeles, March 22 (AP).—Glenn Cunningham has accepted an invitation to try for a new world record in a mile run at the Los Angeles Coliseum April 24, it was announced today.

Terp Team to Meet Vermont Packs Plenty of Batting Punch

Shipley's Crew for Opening Game of Season Hit .357 Last Season; May Improve.

Burt Shipley, who controls the destinies of Maryland University's baseball team, at least knows how Joe McCarthy feels as he views the murderous gang of sluggers that wear "New York Yankees" on their front.

For Mr. Shipley yesterday decided on his starting line-up for the school's opening game against the University of Vermont here next Monday and to his delightful surprise found that the young men he selected are capable of belting the ball at a .357 clip.

At least they did last season and Mr. Shipley has every reason to believe even that amazing average can be jumped a bit. Though there are several days before the Terps face Vermont and Ohio State on consecutive days, Shipley has picked regulars for all but two positions. Only the rightfield and catching spots are yet to be clinched.

However, no matter what young men earn these positions, Shipley is assured of having an attack which will cause every opponent plenty of trouble.

Chumbris Leads Off.

Shorty Chumbris, the bow-legged little shortstop, has been assigned the difficult lead-off position, and when he steps to the plate he carries with him a .340 mark compiled while batting at a similar spot last season. Chambris, because of a keen eye and short stature, draws many bases on balls, and can, if need be, punch out extra base blows that belie his physique.

Ohio State Nine Defeats Generals

Lexington, Va., March 22 (AP).—Timely hitting in the late innings gave Ohio State's baseball team a 6-to-3 victory over Washington and Lee's nine here this afternoon. The Generals defeated the Buckeyes, 9 to 2, yesterday as they opened the baseball season in Virginia.

The Generals tallied in the second on Ohio State errors to take a lead which they held until the fifth when Skinner issued a pass to Dorris and singles by Wasylik and Pope pushed across two runs.

Nine Games Feature Post-A. A. U. Cage Tourney Tonight

By Jack Munhall.

Quarter-final encounters in the 145-pound division and an unlimited game between the crack fives of Senate Beer and Merrick Boys Club tonight feature an attractive nine-game card in the eleventh annual Post-A. A. U. championships which continue in three gymnasiums.

The penalties round in the 145-pound class will be held at Roosevelt gym. Opening the program at 7 o'clock, Merrick Boys Club tackles Washington Grays. And at one-hour intervals, W. W. Chambers faces Roosevelt Boys Club; Columbia Beverage clashes with Roosevelt Boys Club and Boys Club of Washington takes on Regal Neon Flashes.

At Tech the highly promising engagement at 9 o'clock between Senate and Merrick headlines a three-game program. At 7 o'clock Y. M. C. A. meets Police Boys Club No. 4 and at 8 o'clock Regal Clothiers, favorite to win the unlimited title, makes its initial start against Procurement. Regal, Heurich Cup League champion, is expected to win easily and join the three other seeded teams, F. B. I., Delaware & Hudson and Senate Beer.

Tomorrow the debut of eight girls' unlimited teams will hold the spotlight alone, for there are no boys' games scheduled in any class. The "weaker sex" will play at Tech gym and the manner of the presentation of their games will depart somewhat from the order that has been followed in the tournament to date.

At 7 o'clock Rural Electrification Administration will shoot at the goal defended by the Rockville A. A. sextet. Between halves of the first game, teams from Agriculture and Sherwood A. C. will take over the court and play a half of their contest. Then in the original alternate fashion all four teams will finish.

Following the same procedure, two more encounters will begin at approximately 8:15 and 8:35. In the first game, Hyattsville clashes with Bureau of Engraving and Printing with Mount Rainier and United Typewriters due to follow and wind up the program.

On Friday an especially delectable card is expected to induce a record crowd to Tech gym where the semi-finals of the 145-pound class and a game between F. B. I., defending unlimited champon, and Lubeseal, one of its leading challengers vie for the center of interest.

The semifinal pairings will bring together the winner of the Merrick-Washington Grays game against the winner of the Boys Club of Washington-Regal Neon Flashes affair, and the survivor of the W. W. Chambers game against the victor between Columbia Beverage and Salvation Army.

In the only game scheduled yesterday, 100-pound representatives of Northeast Boys Club defeated Washington Boys Club, 31-8, at Merrick. Simmonds, Northeast forward, was leading scorer with 10 points. William scored 7 of the losers' 10 points.

Joey Archibald and Johnny Sciebelli Box Monday in Arena Headliner

$200 Posted By Abrams; Seeks Jones

Local Boy Asks Return Match With Fighter Who Kayoed Him.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Johnny Sciebelli, French-Italian bantamweight, is the "most suitable" opponent Joey Archibald will meet Monday night in the weekly exhibition of the fistic arts at the Arena. The debate will be ten rounds—if it goes the full distance.

Meanwhile Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn announced that George Abrams has posted a $200 side bet and offered to meet Jimmy Jones on a "winner-take-all" basis in a return match. Abrams was knocked out by the Baltimore belter last Monday at the Arena, suffering the first defeat of his professional career.

Ahearn indicated that he will put the bout on April 11, if Jones is willing. Moreover, he is attempting to re-match El Brookman with Ivan Nedomatsky—Jones', brother, for the semifinal on the same card. Nedomatsky whipped Brookman in last Monday's semifinal, knocking him down three times.

From Baltimore, however, come tidings that Jones' manager, Heine Blaustein, isn't eager to put his boy back in against the local middleweight. He wants a flat $1,000 guarantee for the match—something unheard of for an indoor bout.

Archibald, in accpting Sciebelli, serves notice that he will confine his activities to the bantamweight class, henceforth, leaving the featherweights and lightweights to themselves. The little fellow was at a distinct disadvantage in previous bouts, all of which saw him outweighed by five to eight pounds, and the strain was beginning to tell.

Archibald, moreover, is looking forward to his bout with Sixto Escobar this summer at Griffith Stadium, and there is a good possibility instead of being another overweight match, as first indicated, it may be for the world championship. This would be a fair feather in the Providence puncher's chapeau should he win.

On past performances Sciebelli is nothing to rave about, for he has dropped a number of decisions, but he isn't to be laughed off as just another palooka—even by Archibald. He rates several notches above Johnny Mirabella, whom Archibal defeated by a technical knockout in his last appearance here. Schiebelli is a rough-house fighter, and punches better than Mirabella, who hit hard enough to knock Arcibald down twice.

Sciebelli recently outpointed the Japanese scrapper, Kazumi Morioka, who in turn knocked off Bobby Green, who outpointed Tommy Forte. And Forte isn't the world's worst ringman.

Should Abrams Meet Jones Again? Read the Story of Young Van, a Middleweight Who Had a Similar Experience

By Walter Haight.

Aviators try to get into the air as soon as possible after a coworker has been killed in a crash. Big leaguers, fearing they might become bat-shy, are eager to get back to the plate after being injured by a pitched ball. A fighter, if he intends to stay in the ring game, should not be out of action too long after he has been knocked out.

However, I doubt the wisdom of sending Georgie Abrams into the same ring with Jimmy Jones, who flattened him Monday night, for several months, if ever.

Sid Fishel, Abrams' manager, appears to be game to the core. He has cornered Promoter Goldie Ahearn and has sought a return bout for Abrams with Jones within the next two weeks.

I don't want to be accused of trying to manage Abrams with two stubby fingers, a typewriter and a sheet of paper, but I have had some traffic along the same lines and perhaps Kid Abrams and Brother Fishel can profit by the experiences of the once-flourishing fistic firm of Young Van and Old Haight. Of course, Van did the fighting.

Van was a product of the bootleg fight era hereabouts. Under his real name of Warren Van Sciver he operated one season in the local amateur ranks but, when he lost a decision, due to some amateur judging, he turned pro. A big, good looking fellow with a murderous punch, Van soon made a hit and sent eight preliminary boys wiggling. He was moved up to the semifinal spots and continued his winning streak. Among those to lose to the ambitious middleweight was Red Burman, Jack Dempsey's protege then fighting as K. O. Burns, of Baltimore.

Van ran up a string of 14 straight victories, 9 of them by the knockout route. He seemingly was headed for a great fight future and I was slopping along in his wake. He had the best coaching obtainable hereabouts and seemed to have everything necessary to make a champion.

Among Van's six-round victims was one Sammy Britt, who died a couple of years ago. Van punched out a clean decision over Britt, never better than a good preliminary boy. Later Van was scheduled for the semifinal on the Rosenbloom-Barry card at the Twin City Arena, out Laurel way.

His booked opponent hurt his hand and was unable to appear. Would we accept Britt as a substitute? We did and why not? Van already had beaten Britt and Britt did not have a knockout on his record.

At the opening bell, Van met Britt coming out of his corner and hit him with everything but the ticket booth. With perhaps 30 seconds to go in the first round, they clinched. The referee broke them and Britt's right flew out. Van hit the floor and I collapsed. He was knocked out by the guy who couldn't hit!

I was stampeded just as is Sid Fishel. I hadn't talked much about it, but I had dreamed of championships and fast cars, etc.

"We can beat that Britt" kept running through my mind. I sought the advice of older fight heads. The consensus was that Van should go right back at Britt the following week and knock his block off.

Van was far in front when Britt put over a lucky punch, they said. (Some of yesterday's Abrams-Jones rehash seemed an echo.)

Van agreed because I agreed.

The following week Van climbed into the ring with Britt. Van swarmed all over him for two minutes. They clinched. The referee separated them. Britt's right flew out and Van went down. I went down wth him.

In fairness to Van and if an alibi can be made after all these years, let me say that Van got up this time, but he misjudged the count and was ready to fight when the referee waved him aside.

Van came back to fight a sensational draw with Henry Irving and later lost a decision, the only other defeat on his record, to the same fighter. This bout, incidentally, drew about the equivalent of Monday night's show despite the fact it was held in Alexandria and after the banks had been closed for three days.

Shortly afterward, we had a meeting of our fistic firm and decided that Van's jaw was excellent for chewing purposes. He had made money. There wasn't a mark on him. He had a good job outside the ring. And so, we let well enough alone.

Van now is vice president of the local stereotypers' union, married and has a baby daughter.

Perhaps one knockout doesn't make a bum fighter any more than one robin makes a spring. Possibly, Abrams will come back and battle on to gold and glory as some other fighters have done after being flattened.

Time and the durability of his jaw will tell.

Cohen Signed For Mat Card

Bronx Bruiser to Meet Olson Thursday.

Sammy Cohen, bald bad man from the Bronx, tops a list of four matmen signed last night to complete tomorrow's wrestling program at the Arena, and from the looks of it Promoter Joe Turner has another wild party on his hands.

Cohen tangles with Heine Olson, Midwestern Swede, who said "Uncle" for Bronko Valdez in his last appearance here after sustaining a bloody nose in a furious bout. This will be a good chance to redeem himself unless Cohen is in another of those rare moods.

Hans Schwartz, German newcomer, and Jose Rodriguez are down for another preliminary struggle, limited to 30 minutes. Schwartz comes here with an enviable reputation, and bids fair to become a fixture in the local ring. He is husky and clever, and a showman in the bargain.

All of them are down under the cofeatures involving Dean Detton vs. Chief Sanooke in one bout, and Dr. John Murphy and Chief Chewaki in the other. The preliminaries, in this instance, stand a good chance of stealing the featured artists' thunder.

Cohen tossed Louis Pacigalupi in the unbelievable time of 4½ minutes last week, and made a tremendous hit with the fans in so doing. He tossed the Alpine Italian around like a stack of hot cakes, and after pinning him stepped calmly on his neck returning to his corner. He likes 'em tough and gives the customers a run for their money.—ATCHISON.

Mt. Vernon Wins On Goal by Peck

Tom Pecks last-second field goal, a long shot from midcourt, gave Mount Vernon a 35-33 victory over American Railroads in the feature game of the Community Center city wide tournament last night at Tech High School. Mount Vernon held a 24-19 margin at halftime, but the Railroaders overtook them in the final period.

In other games played Roosevelt Boys Clubs bester Bell Clothiers, 25-21 while Plaza downed Sigma Mu Sigma, 35-28. "Whoa" Dobyn tallied 16 points for Plaza. The tournament will be resumed Saturday night.

Maxie Berger Wins.

New York, March 22 (AP).—Maxie Berger, Canadian lightweight champion from Montreal, tonight scored an upset victory over Enrico Venturi, Italian titleholder, in an eight-round bout before a crowd of 12,000 at the Coliseum. Each weighed 141 pounds.

Venturi, making his first start since being handed a three-month suspension after his bout with Henry Armstrong, got in his best licks in the final round.

Platak Wins In Handball

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., March 22.—Joe Platak, the stalwart southpaw champion from Chicago, brushed aside lanky George Di Re, a fellow townsman, today in his campaign for a fourth consecutive national A. A. U. handball title.

Di Re, representing Chicago's Medinah Club, fell before Platak's onslaught of slashing serves and masterful timing. There was no doubt of where victory lay even during the first five minutes of play. Platak won, 21—6, 21—8.

The champion will meet Joe Gordon, of Los Angeles, in the quarter-finals Thursday. Gordon reached the quarter-finals when Joe Goldsmith, also of Los Angeles, withdrew from singles competition.

Jack Clements, of San Francisco, 1937 National Junior champion, surprised the gallery by defeating Jack Schwartz, of Washington, D. C., 21—5, 21—17. Clements and Louis Zerbo, of Detroit, will clash in the quarter-finals Thursday. Zerbo turned back Joe Powers, of Los Angles, today, 21—14, 18—21, 21—8, in one of the hardest fought matches of the tournament.

Tomorrow's play will be given over to doubles matches.

This Morning

the next day he was walking with a big limp. Zeke had hurt himself on that slide. He was hurt badly, in the groin, and he could not play the next day.

As far as that goes, he couldn't play for a week, the club doctor told Dykes. Bonura needed a rest. But it seems that Bonura's rest endured for two weeks, and then three weeks, and then a month, and Dykes began to show a slight impatience with the big Italian who, on sight, didn't appear to be so seriously injured.

But Zeke maintained that he was hurt, and there was nothing Dykes could do about it until one night when the Chicago manager chanced into a State street night club. And there was Bonura with his lady fair maneuvering through all of the intricacies of the rumba and doing better than a fair job of it. Now a guy with an injured groin is in no shape to gallop through the rumba, of all dances, Dykes reasoned, and he was pretty hot about it.

Thank the Little Fly.

"Bonura is dogging it," Dkes declared to Chicago newspapermen the next day. "He's not well enough to play ball for us, but he can do the rumba. No ball player on my club can get away with that.

And when Bonura read that statement, he too was hot. And thus it came to pass that Dykes and Bonura began to have their differences. And it was apparent that Bonura's days with the White Sox were numbered. And when he was traded to Washington, it came as no surprise.

So you see, my little seabiscuits, Washington fans would not be exulting today in the presence of Bonura on the Nats were it not for the fact that big Zeke went lame that day in Detroit because Jimmy Dykes' nose was itching from the maraudings of a ittee bittee house fly (musca domestica).

Yanks Beat Dodgers.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 22 (AP).—Lee Stine and Johnny Murphy provided airtight pitching as the New York Yankees whipped the Brooklyn Dodgers today, 7 to 0.

Stine, up for his third major league trial, yielded two scratch hits in five innings, while Murphy, relief ace in 1937, allowed three safeties in four frames.

Bill Dickey, the Yanks' catcher, hit a home run to left center with George Selkirk on base. Flash Gordon, the champions' new second sacker, also collected a round-tripper. Dickey was the leading batter with a single and a double in addition to his homer.

Memphis Beats Phils.

Biloxi, Miss., March 22 (AP).—The Memphis Chicks, of the Southern Association, today shut out the Phillies, 2 to 0, in a game in which 14 Phils were left on base.

Paul Spencer, Lester Willis and Paul Paynick issued 11 bases on balls, in addition to yielding six hits, but in the pinches retired the Phils on pop flies.

Memphis scored both its runs in the fifth off Bucky Walter on three singles, a sacrifice, a wild pitch and an error.

DEAN BOYS SHELLED.

Bradenton, Fla., March 22 (AP).—The Boston Bees battered Bradenton's most famous citizens, Paul and Dizzy Dean all over the lot today while overwhelming the St. Louis Cardinals, 13-9. Most of the 17 Boston hits were made off the brothers and, in the third inning alone, Paul was belted for nine hits that resulted in that many runs.

After watching Paul's performance, Branch Rickey said Paul was through as a pitcher. "He showed nothing and his arm was dead. I have given up all hope of his ever coming back."

Rookie Max West broke into the Bees' line-up at first base when Elbie Fletcher decided to rest his lame back, and pounded out two long singles while his teammates celebrated their field day at the plate.

GALAN SLUGS, CUBS WIN.

Los Angeles, Calif., March 22 (AP).—Outfielder Augie Galan hit a home run, triple, double and single today to lead the Chicago Cubs to their second straight win over the Chicago White Sox. The score was 13 to 1.

Tex Carleton and Clay Bryant, sharing the Cub pitching assignment, permitted the American Leaguers only six hits, five of them coming off Bryant in the last five innings. Bill Cox, George Glck and Jess Dobernic, rookie hurlers, each pitched three innings for the Sox.

Before the game, Manager Charley Grimm, of the Cubs, announced the indefinite suspension of Walter Higbe, rookie pitcher from Moline, Ill., of the Three-Eye League, for failure to join the club.

Coach Picks Terp Team

batting order, a spot which calls for a good bunter, is First Baseman George Knepley, who batted at a .303 clip last year, though he was under .300 most of the season. In third position comes the dependable Waverly Wheeler, slugging third baseman.

The cleanup spot has been awarded to Bill Bryant in appreciation of his fine hitting last season, when he led the Terps with an average of .424. Bryant, the centerfielder, is also an excellent defensive player and in all around ability one of the better collegiate performers in the vicinity.

Following Bryant will be Mike Surgent, a young man who promises to drive in anyone that his predecessor leaves on base. Surgent, the leftfielder, who hit .390, will be followed by Eddie Johnson, son of the "Big Train," whose .412 mark last season made him Maryland's second best hitter.

Batting in seventh position will be either Lefty (brother to Shorty) Chumbris, or Hugh Keller, the sophomore star, whose brother, Charley, is now trying out with the Yankees. They are battling for the right to roam rightfield. Chumbris batted only .262 last season, but is deemed capable of doing much better.

The eighth spot also is undecided, with Joe Crisaful or Robert Burns fighting for the catching job. The backstopping position was left wide open when Knocky Thomas withdrew from school in the waning weeks of last season.

The pitching chores against Vermont will be evenly diveded between Charley Weidenger, Bill Silverman and George Wood. Bill Springer and Karl Ruble will split the work against the Buckeyes.

D. C. Women Golfers Appoint Captains for Team Matches

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Mrs. Noble J. Waldron, team chairman of the Women's District of Columbia Golf Association, announced the team captains for the coming season in a meeting at the Kennedy-Warren yesterday. Mrs. Ralph W. Payne, president of the association, and Mrs. T. J. Johnson, manager of the intercity team, attended the meeting with the team officials.

The interclub play is tentatively scheduled to start on April 19, when eight second and seven third teams will inaugurate the season, with the two first teams starting a five-match series May 3.

Mrs. K. S. Giles, of Indian Spring, will captain the District first teams, while the club captains will be Mrs. B. Platt at Chevy Chase and Mrs. Charlotte Stern, of Indian Spring.

The first teams will play two matches at each course and a fifth on a neutral layout. The defending champion Chevy Chase team will be no more than an even choice against the star-studded Four Corners aggregation.

A pair of Columbia linkswomen, Mrs. Earl M. Amick and Mrs. C. D. Mills, will captain the District second teams, while the individual club team leaders will be Mrs. F. L. Whitacre, Army and Navy; Mrs. A. W. Tucker Beaver Dam; Mrs. J. F. Gross, Columbia; Mrs. F. D. Letts, Chevy Chase; Mrs. R. L. Rose, Congressional; Mrs. H. J. Simons, Manor; Mrs. Douglas S. Tschiffely, Washington, and Mrs. Henry Goodman, Woodmont.

The Beaver Dam line-up, captained by Mrs. Tucker, is the defending titleholder among the second teams.

District third team captains will be Mrs. Frank H. Kramer, of Beaver Dam, and Mrs. R. E. Joyce, Kenwood. The clubs will be captained by Mrs. W. E. Sullivan, Army and Navy; Mrs. Oscar Coolican, Chevy Chase; Mrs. King Cornell, Columbia; Mrs. Fred Lewis, Congressional; Mrs. Hope Wilkinson, Indian Spring; Mrs. Charles Vaile, Kenwood, and Mrs. Doran Platt, Manor.

Chevy Chase is the lone club represented in all the first, second and third team series, while Indian Spring is listed for competition in first and third team play, and Army and Navy, Columbia, Congressional and Manor will place teams in the second and third team competition.

The compete round-robin schedule of matches will be announced following the executive committee meeting next Monday.

New York, March 22.—Here, at last, is the up-town low-down on the Louis-Schmeling situation, as given off by the challenger's manager, Joe Jacobs:

Jacobs—called "Yussel-the-Muscle" along Slapstrasse—chewed morosely on a bite of buttered toast.

"I have a strong hunch that Mike Jacobs and his 20th Century outfit do not want Schmeling to fight Louis for the title in June. That's why I'm goin' to do certain things," he said.

Yussel took another reluctant bit of toast and a gulp of coffee. He was having breakfast in Hymie Caplin's tavern. It was 4:30 p. m., and the middle-sized man in the rakish brown hat and double-breasted brown suit was not hungry, because he had a brown taste.

I asked Yussel what certain things he planned doing.

"I'm goin' to Chicago for the Louis-Harry Thomas fight on April 1," he said. "I want to be on the spot in case Louis tries to claim a hand or rib fracture. I want to be there in case he tries to wriggle out of the Schmeling fight because of an injury. If nothing happens, I'll fly back to New York on the morning of April 2 and sail that night on the liner Hamburg for Germany. I'll be in Schmeling's corner at Hamburg on April 16 when he fights Steve Dudas. But the main reason I'm goin' over is to bring Max right back to New York after that fight. Max cabled me today from his training camp at Aumuehle. He says we'll both be back in New York on April 29.

* * * *

"Under our contract with Mike Jacobs, Schmeling doesn't have to be in the United States until May 12, 40 days before the scheduled fight date on June 22. But he'll be here nearly two weeks in advance. I'll make sure of that. You've heard all the noise the Twentieth Century has been raising recently about those 40 days. They're just trying to build up a possible out. And I'm not taking any chances."

But why was Promoter Mike Jacobs and the Twentieth Century trying to prevent Schmeling from fighting World Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis?

Joe Jacobs acted as if he were choking on a gulp of coffee. Then he snapped back, "You don't have to ask me that. You know why Mike doesn't want Maxie to fight Louis again. Maxie knocked Louis out the first time they met. And I know, and everyone with an ounce of sense knows that Maxie will knock him out again—that he will take the title."

* * * *

I interpolated, "Then Schmeling will run back to Germany and refuse to defend the title against worthwhile opponents for two or three years?"

Yussel reared up off his seat and declared, 'You're crazy and Mike Jacobs is crazy if you think that. Listen—Schmeling is under contract with Mike to defend the title in September, in case he wins it from Louis. He'll defend it alright. And I'll tell you why. Schmeling needs money. He lost most of his early earnings through an attorney friend in Germany who invested it unfortunately. I wouldn't say that Schemling is broke. But I do know that he hasn't much in the banks. His only good shot since his losses was the $140,000 that we got from the Louis fight. But when taxes were taken out, and so forth, he didn't have nearly that. Don't forget that he made six trips over here, trying to fight Jim Braddock, or someone, for the title. That cost him $30,000. And Maxie's status in Germany causes him to spend too much money living every year. He needs dough.

* * * *

"If he wins the title, he'll get a nice piece of change. But he'll need more money. And as champion he can fight Maxie Baer in September and draw a $2,000,000 gate — because Baer knocked Schmeling out the first time they fought. The champion's cut of that September bout would be 42½ percent or about $800,000. Anyone who thinks Schmeling wouldn't fight for that kind of money is crazy. After all he's not in this business for love."

Okay—But after Schmeling arrives in New York on April 29, what will he do then?

Then—Schmeling and his trainer, Max Machon, and Manager Joe will depart almost immediately for French Lick Springs, Ind. Schmeling would do his preliminary training there, at least.

* * * *

Oh! So Schmeling was going to French Lick. That was news indeed. That indicated almost positively that the Schmeling-Louis fight would be staged at Soldier Field, Chicago. Because the last time Schmeling came to this country—to fight Louis—he refused to go to French Lick. Schmeling always insisted upon going immediately to the camp where he would train for his fight. So—if Schmeling was going to Tom Taggert's place at French Lick, just an overnight ride from Chicago, the chances were that the fight would occur in the Windy City.

Yussel refused to comment on this angle. He said, "I know where the fight is going. But I won't say anything about it. That is something for Mike Jacobs to announce. All I can say is that we're going to French Lick and that we'll attend the Kentucky Derby at Louisville on May 7."

"But if the fight is actually slated for Chicago, where will Schmeling wind up his training?" I asked.

Yussel wiped his mouth with a napkin and replied, "French Lick."

The Rew Is Victor At Fair Grounds

New Orleans, March 22 (AP).—The Rew, a consistent 5-year-old gelding racing for Miss M. Hodge, took the measure of five other platers in the 6-furlong feature at the Fair Grounds today.

In scoring his second victory in 11 starts after finishing either second or third on seven other occasions, The Rew paid $6.20 for $2. He was clocked in 1:14 4-5 over a muddy track.

Cal Rainey Winner Of Tropical Feature; Pays a $13.60 Ticket

Favorite Players Suffer Severe Setback as Colt Beats Happy Code, Odds-On Choice, by Half Length; Our Ketcham Shows.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 22.—Cal Rainey, a colt that has been racing in rather indifferent fashion since his winning performance of January 5, regained his top form and dealt a severe blow to favorite players in the featured fifth race here today. The Orienta Stable's representative, trained by silver thatched "Pat" Knebelkamp, defeated W. J. (Buddy) Hirsch's Happy Code, an odds-on choice, by a good half length. C. S. Bromley's Our Ketcham accounted for the show, three lengths away.

Under Arthur Cooper's energetic urging, the winner finished the six furlongs in 1:12 flat and paid his backer's $13.60 for $2. Happy Code, which was seeking a double for her owner and Apprentice Lucas Dupps, closed at 3 to 4 in the betting. Only five 3-year-olds accepted the issue. Bloomer Girl and Grand Light were on the tail-end of the procession. The event was styled for $3,000 top and $2,500 bottom platers.

Happy Code, a speed type horse, battled her way to the front from the middle post position. She had Cal Rainey as her chief rival all the way. Young Dupps swung Happy Code into a daylight lead after a preliminary duel and it seemed that the Happy Argo filly would go on as she entered the stretch with slightly more than a length to spare. Then Cooper went to work in earnest on the winner, plying his bat and getting all possible out of the Spanish Play colt. The surprise horse collared the leader entering the last sixteenth and was going away in the closing strides.

Harpen Belle, an $8.50 for $2 choice in an open betting affair, barely made the grade in today's curtain raiser. Hard ridden by Carroll Bierman, the 7-year-old mare drove between horses with a courageous stretch bid and prevailed over Highpool by a head. Musical Jack was only a half-length farther behind. Maebob and Musical Jack tired after showing the way into the last furlong. Harpen Belle and Highpool then took up the issue. Bierman outrode littlle R. Connors to the wire. The time for the 6 furlongs was 1:12 2-5.

Three of the seven starters in the second race closed at approximately 2 to 1 in the betting. When it came to running, Sky Hostess, one of those favored, easily outran her rivals and scored by two lengths under Lucas Dupps, the combination returning $6.59. Officiate, which was a slight choice, improved his position at every pole, but could not threaten the pacemaker while beating Taka Walk by five lengths for the place. Long Face, third of the heavily backed trio, was a poor fourth.

Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' consistent 2-year-old filly, Sweet Patrice, added to her winning streak with a hard earned neck victory over Spanish Mammon in the half-mile third dash. Suzanne Peck was third, three lengths back. The winner, a 1 to 2 choice under Wayne Wright, has finished in the money in every start. She has won four of her ten races, and this was her third in a row.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—HARPEN BELLE, $8.50, $4.70, $2.90; HIGHPOOL, $5.80, $3.40; MUSICAL JACK, $3.20.

HARPEN BELLE followed the pace under slight restraint until well around the turn, closed with determination between the leaders when placed to pressure and outlasted HIGHPOOL when the real issue came. HIGHPOOL, well up on the outside, bore over on HARPEN BELLE in the last three furlongs and Connors was unable to do him full justice. MUSICAL JACK forced a steady pace in the early stages and raced MAEBOB in his defeat, but then faltered in the stretch run.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. For maiden 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 2:46. Off 2:47. Winner, R. S. Clark's red ch. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SKY HOSTESS, $6.50, $3.40, $2.70; OFFICIATE, $3.20, $2.60; TAKAWALK, $4.30.

SKY HOSTESS, quickest to begin, drew clear rapidly in the opening furlong and held away the remainder of the trip. OFFICIATE, vigorously urged, moved up steadily on the inside in the final quarter mile, but never seriously threatened the winner. TAKAWALK, slow to get going, gradually improved his position on the extreme outside after leaving the backstretch and disposed of the others in the stretch run. LONG FACE moved up midway around the turn, but was unable to maintain his position. DR. HEIMAN closed some ground in the last quarter mile.

Daily Double, Harpen Belle and Sky Hostess, Paid $34.40.

THIRD RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $900; allowances. The Seminole. For 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:14. Off 3:18½. Winner, Mrs. E. D. Jacobs' br. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SWEET PATRICE, $3.00, $2.20, $2.20; SPANISH MAMMON, $3.70, $2.20; SUZANNE PECK, $2.60.

SWEET PATRICE, quickest away, opened up a clear lead in the opening furlong, but faltered after being straightened into the stretch and was doing her best to stave off SPANISH MAMMON'S bid. The latter, slow to get going and pinched back leaving the backstretch, moved up swiftly between the leaders on the stretch turn, closed gamely when the final issue came and was wearing the winner down at the finish. SUZANNE PECK, a forward contender all the way, was easily best of the others. HELLO STRANGER, nearest in pursuit of the leader in the early stages, weakened in the stretch run.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:49. Off 3:52. Winner, Miss A. Doris' b. g. MIXWELL, eased off the pace in the run down the backstretch, came around his opponents at the three-furlong pole, raced REBEKAH into submission and drew clear, but then faltered and just lasted long enough to dead heat LADFIELD. The latter broke alertly, followed the pace well up under steadying restraint until straightened into the stretch then closed courageously and just failed to gain decision. LADY MARYLAND, slow to get going, stole through on the inside midway around the turn and finished strongly through the stretch. CROWNING GLORY, under pressure all the way, was going steadily at the finish. HAPPY KNOT retired after going about a half mile. REBEKAH stopped to a walk in the final furlong.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. The National Restaurant Association. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:21. Off 4:24. CAL RAINEY, away alertly, displayed good speed and went in closest pursuit of the leader the entire trip, responded courageously when taken to the outside in the final furlong and outlasted HAPPY CODE in the final drive. HAPPY CODE, compelled to be rushed in the early stages to obtain the lead, set a fast pace in the early running, but then faltered slightly through the stretch for her effort in the first half mile. OUR KETCHAM closed stoutly and easily held the other safe. BLOOMER GIRL and GRAND LIGHT had no excuses.

SIXTH RACE—One mile and 60 yards. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post 4:52. Off 4:52½. Winner, J. H. Loxan's ch. f. MISS MARLBORO broke a trifle slow, followed the pace under restraint until well around the lower turn, moved up with determination on the outside when called upon and held TUTTICURIO safe in the stretch run. TUTTICURIO broke alertly, displayed good speed and raced TOP TAX, WHOOPER and PERLETTE into defeat in the early stages, and made a bold effort when the real issue came. BREEZING ALONG, off slowly and far back in the early stages, stole through on the inside and closed a big gap in the final three furlongs to wear PERLETTE down in the final drive. The latter faltered in the stretch.

Business Tide Ebbs to Level Of 7 Years Ago

Industrial Output 81% in 1931, Up to 122% in 1937, Now Under 80%.

Minneapolis, March 22.—The Nation is now operating at 1931 levels of business activity, with industrial pay rolls, employment, department-store sales and numerous other economic indexes paralleling 1931 figures with surprising closeness, a comparative tabulation by Northwestern National Life Insurance Co. shows.

Industrial production for 1931 averaged 81 per cent of the 1923-25 normal, reached a high of 122 in March, 1937, but registered 80 in December, 1937, and for the first three months of 1938 is running a little under 80, measured by the same Federal Reserve Board index.

Unemployment totals in 1931 averaged a little under 9,000,000 for the year, by A. F. of L. estimates; for December, 1937, the same source set the total at 9,355,000; varied sources estimate the January, 1938, unemployed at from 10,000,000 to 10,300,000. The index of the factory pay rolls was 67.4 for the year 1931; it soared to 98 for the year 1937, but by January, 1938, it had dropped back to 71.1.

Department Stores.

Department-store sales for the year 1931 were 92 per cent of the 1923-25 average; for 1937 the index stood at 93; it registered 90 in January, 1938, and 88 for February, 1938. Volume of new automobile financing in January, 1938, was 48 per cent below January, 1937, but 4 per cent above January, 1931.

National income for 1931 was $61,459,000,000 and $67,463,000,000 in 1937, according to Government estimates; for January, 1931, $5,881,000,000, and for January, 1938, $5,359,000,000.

Individual bank deposits in the United States were $47,889,000,000, or $385 per capita on June 30, 1931, and were $50,051,000,000, or $390 per capita on June 30, 1937. Scattering figures as of early March, 1938, indicate a shrinkage from a year ago of from 1½ to 5 per cent according to locality, bringing current totals still closer to the 1931 figures.

Cities Service Plans To Cut Common

New York, March 22 (AP).—Reduction of outstanding common stock of Cities Service Co. will be voted on by stockholders at the annual meeting April 26 at Dover, Del., it was disclosed today. 9.5% Decline In Dividends

New York, March 22.—Common dividend declarations of 333 leading corporations in 35 different industries totaled $338,982,000 in the period from January 2 to March 15, against $382,539,000 in the similar period of 1937, according to the Standard Statistics Co. today.

This decrease of 9.5 per cent from a year earlier illustrates the conservative dividend policies now being followed by corporations, reflecting both the decline in earnings and the prospect for modification or elimination of the undistributed profits tax.

Dividend declarations over so short a period, of course, may be misleading, as the heavy payments in 1937 came later in the year. Moreover, in some cases, the action of a single company has distorted the group showing. In the case of retail companies, the fact that most fiscal years end January 31, brought year-end distributions into the calculations.

General Motors Sales Set Overseas Record

New York, March 22 (AP).—General Motors cars and trucks made in American, Canadian, English and German factories and sold to dealers outside of the United States and Canada totaled 30,335 units in February, highest for the month on record, it was announced here today.

The volume was 10.3 per cent greater than overseas sales during February, 1937. The two-month volume at 60,190 units for 1938 was 10.5 per cent over the same period a year ago.

Wheat Rallies After Decline To 3-Year Lows

Early Tumble Follows Weakness in Market at Liverpool.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 22.—Despite temporary tumbles to low price records unequaled in almost three years, Chicago wheat values rose anew late totday, and on most transactions showed gains.

R. I. Mansfield, one of the foremost trade authorities here, said there was a growing sentiment in Chicago grain circles that recent extreme weakness of the Liverpool wheat market was based not on news, but on a desire for low priced ownership, and particularly of United States wheat. Persistent downturns of Liverpool wheat quotations were largely responsible for today's transient setback of prices here.

At the close Chicago wheat futures were unchanged to ⅝ higher, compared with yesterday's finish; May, 86@86⅛; July, 83¼@83⅜. Corn unchanged to ¼ lower; May, 59¾; July, 61½. Oats, ⅛ off to ⅛ up. Rye at ¼ decline to ⅛ advance, and provisions, 5 cents to 20 cents down.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively.
A Special Correspondent.

Rails and Industrials Touch New Low Levels; Trading Continues Dull.

New York, March 22.—United States Government bonds held firm, but that was the best that could be said of securities markets. Stocks declined without resistance. An extremely dull hour was followed by a mild increase in trading, but sales for the day were only about 750,000 shares. Last prices were the poorest, or nearly so. May wheat gained an eighth of a cent at 86 cents a bushel. Dollars were a see-saw affair.

In stocks the liquidation was not severe and if short selling played a part in pushing down prices it also was leisurely. The market was so thin, so denuded of buyers, that even light offerings of shares resulted in sales only at lower prices. Railroad stocks had the most difficult time and nearly all sank to the lowest prices in five or six years. Such unfamiliar prices were seen as 26 for Chesapeake & Ohio, 125 for Telephone, less than 45 for Standard Oil, and 35 for General Electric.

Farm Shares Weaken.

Leading stocks sank 1 to 4 points. Industrial stocks held at slightly above their low prices of February 4. Agricultural shares were especially weak, but gold shares were firm. Stocks to drop 1 to 5 points could be found in the steel, metal, chemical, and electrical equipment groups. Silvers broke after early recovery. The various classes of Safeway Stores dropped 1 to 8 points. Case and Westinghouse tumbled 5 points.

Curb exchange prices also moved generally lower with fractional losses the rule on sales volume about the same as that of yesterday, a little over 100,000 shares. Most of the price recessions of consequence took place in the late trading. At least two score issues penetrated their former low prices. Bliss & Laughlin yielded 2 points, as did Eastern Gas preferred. Singer Manufacturing, the highest-priced stock on the list, backed down half a dozen points. St. Regis Paper preferred retreated. Among the stocks to sell at new low prices were Babcock & Wilcox, the varoius classes of Brill, Colon Development, Cosden, Great Northern Paper, Gilbert preferred and New Jersey Zinc. Bridgeport Gas showed a loss of 5 points on its first appearance this year. Woolworth, Ltd., and a few utilities were exceptions to the weakness.

Poor Business; Poor Markets.

War news was virtually off the front page and nothing else that caught the eye of the casual reader could by any stretch of the imagination be set down as a cause for the weakness and dullness of the stock market. If simply through a process of elimination, there remained the big explanation of the business depression as the chief, if not the only, important cause for the decline in prices will be interpreted to forecast body that business is about as poor now as it has been at any time since the break-up of the 1929 boom. It has been that way so long that the stock market is now more likely to be used as a barometer than as a thermometer. Persistent weakness in prices wil be interpreted to forecast a still further decline in business.

Actually business is running on a level, according to reports from several key industries. It is getting no worse and little, if any, better; but such a period, unless something untoward happens, is usually the forerunner of improvement. On that score the stock market then should look for better times, but everything is too uncertain to justify any great venture along conventional lines. The symbol IF covers the ticker tape, for it applies to every price shown.

Some of the favorable ifs may be noted for such use as any one can make of them. Business will improve promptly and briskly, if President Roosevelt decides to be fair to the public utilities; if Congress pays no further attention to Treasury "experts" and to New Deal managers of economy and passes a tax bill that will permit business to look for a profit and will reopen the capital market, and that involves repeal of the undistributed profits tax; all if no more wars break out.

French Finance.

The decision of the French government to resort to the Bank of France for another 5,000,000,000 francs, thereby continuing to finance the budget deficit with the printing press, gave the French franc a jolt, sending it below 3.03 at one time, but short covering then pushed the rate up to 3.06 cents for a slight net gain on the day. It is said to be almost impossible to calculate how much France now owes what, with the perpetual internal debt, amortizable debt, foreign debt, political debt (war debt to other governments), French railway, posts, telegraphs and sundry other guaranties.

What this Government is doing to finance agencies by indirect guaranteed obligations the French have been doing for a much longer time. A rough and ready estimate of French debt of all kinds would place the figure in the neighborhood of 500 billion francs. With francs at 6 cents, as they were a year or so ago, that would mean a debt of about thirty billion dollars. With the franc at 3 cents the thirty billion is written down by half. That part which is in foreign currency (small portion now) is doubly as burdensome to the French.

Banking Position.

Changes in the condition figures of New York City reporting member banks in the week of March 16 dominated those of the reporting member banks in 101 cities. Loans to brokers and dealers, reflecting the conversion of maturing Treasury securities and the sale of converted issues at the tax date, decreased $122,000,000. Of the decreas $27,000,000 was in New York City. Demand deposits shrank $98,000,000 in this city and $179,000,000 at all reporting banks. Commercial loans increased a bit outside New York, with the result that while there was a decrease of $15,000,000 here, there was a decline of only $7,000,000 for the country as a whole, which may have reflected liquidation of inventories. Somewhat divergent policies were followed in Government security portfolios, New York banks disposed of $13,000,000, Boston and Cleveland banks each sold $12,000,000. Chicago banks bought $38,000,000 on balance, with the result that holdings of all the banks increased $8,000,000. There was also a rise of $12,000,000 in holdings of Government guaranteed securities, of which $10,000,000 was here. Total bank credit employed by the reporting institutions shrank $118,000,000.

Friend of SEC.

The SEC has found a friend, and one now engaged in the investment banking business, if any such business still can be found. Theodore S. Watson, of Watson & White, said today he "took direct issue with any banking criticism of the speech of John W. Hanes," now a SEC man but formerly with C. D. Barney & Coo., Stock Exchange member firm. Mr. Watson called the criticisms "shallow and misdirected" and to show the warmth of his feelings Mr. Watson ventured the opinion (which probably will not be concurred in by every one who may chance to read it) that "Mr. Hanes has more common sense in his little finger than ninety per cent of the bankers have in their heads." The investment bankers who have thus been counted and physiologically classified probably will not grow enthusiastic should Mr. Watson eventually wind up as a member of the SEC.

Income Tax Receipts 5.1% Over Year Ago

The Treasury said yesterday that income tax collections in the first 21 days of March totaled $685,689,563, an increase of 5.1 per cent over the comparable period last year. These figures, officials said, represented actual deposits of internal revenue collectors. Previously, the Treasury reported that deposits and estimated receipts in the first 15 days were 18 per cent ahead of last year.

Sears, Roebuck Sales Surpass All Old Peaks

But Net for Fiscal Year, $5.58, Is Lower Than for Previous Period.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 22.—Sears, Roebuck and Co., today reported net earnings and sales for the fiscal year ended January 31 broke all previous records for the retail sales and mail order concern.

Consolidated net income was $30,828,248, equal to $5.58 a share outstanding, compared with $30,660,198, the previous year, or $6.27 a share before issuance of additional shares in January, 1937. Net sales totaled $537,242,400, an increase of 8 per cent compared with 1936. The 1937 figure, according to Robert E. Wood, president, does not include net loss of unconsolidated insurance companies of $176,390 for the year ended December 31.

Wood said that on January 31 Sears' inventory was 5 per cent larger than a year earlier. The current inventory was below that of the corresponding date a year ago.

McKesson & Robbins.

Bridgeport, Conn., March 22.—In McKesson & Robbins, Inc., annual report, released today, consolidated net earnings for 1937 after provision for interest, depreciation and taxes, were 11.58 per cent ahead of 1936. The earnings are equivalent to $1.60 per share, after deducting preference dividends paid, compared with $1.32 per share in 1936.

Consolidated net sales amounted to $174,572,229 compared to $153,119,474 for 1936, an increase of 14 per cent. Of the sales, wine and liquor sales in 1937 were $44,714,907 compared with $31,009,256 in 1936, an increase of 44.2 per cent.

F. Donald Coster, president, in his letter to stockholders says: "All business is struggling under an oppressive tax load that requires adjustment to loading capacity before healthy business can be restored. The general instinct of the Government for increasing tax rates and creating new sources of revenue has resulted in the enactment of 5 tax measures since 1933, all increasing taxes, yet not catching up with Government expenditures.

Social Security Tax.

"The new social security taxes are beginning to make themselves felt; our contribution toward this tax last year was $345,915.32 or approximately 27 cents per share on common stock outstanding, which does not include approximately $120,000 contributed by our employes.

"Our tax bills, paid or accrued, for the last year amounted to $1,988,900.49, equivalent to $1.55 per share, on 1,282,983 shares of common stock outstanding, compared with $1.60 per share earned for our common stockholders.

"Putting it in another way, from a total of $5,637,823.20 earned for stockholders, before taxes, $1,988,900.49 was paid or accrued in taxes, representing 35.28 per cent of earnings before taxes, leaving a net of $3,649,922.71, (64.72 per cent) for stockholders, on which our stockholders will be charged personal income tax upon distribution.

1937 Burley Crop 84% More Than 1936

The Agriculture Department Crop Reporting Board estimated today that 1937 production of burley tobacco was 402,673,000 pounds. This yield, the board said was 84 per cent larger than the 1936 crop of 218,252,000 pounds, but 5 per cent less than the record crop of 424,751,000 pounds in 1931.

Today's estimate, the board said, represents an upward revision of about 10 per cent from the preliminary estimate made in December.

SEC Requests Delay Of Whitney Sentence

The Securities Commission requested New York legal authorities today to postpone for two weeks sentence on Richard Whitney, bankrupt former New York Stock Exchange president.

Chairman O. Douglas sent a message to Ambrose V. McCall, assistant attorney general of New York State, and Thomas E. Dewey, district attorney for New York County, asking postponement to give the commission time to complete its own investigation of the Whitney failure.

19.4 Per Cent Drop Seen for Farm Income

Decline for 1938 Expected to Be the Same as From 1929 to 1930.

In view of the similarity between the business slump at the end of 1929 and the slump at the end of 1937, it may be tentatively assumed that the percentage increase in annual farm income from 1937 to 1938 will be the same as the decrease from 1929 to 1930, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The returns on farm income for January provided support for this assumption. While the decrease from the level of a year ago for this month, amounting to 9.0 per cent, was considerably less than the estimated decrease for the entire year, it was greater than the decrease which occurred from January, 1929, to January, 1930. That decrease amounted to 7.9 per cent.

If the annual farm income shows a decrease of 19.4 per cent this year, it will drop from $8,521,000,000 in 1937 to $6,868,000,000 in 1938. This means that income from marketings in 1938 will amount to $6,501,000,000, providing that it is correct to assume that the Government's benefit payments this year will equal the $367,000,000 paid out last year.

January Marketing.

There is other evidence prevailing at the present time that the estimate of this year's annual farm income from marketings will prove to be approximately correct. It seems fair to assume that the quantity of farm products sold in January will represent this year's annual rate. The rate in January was above last year's annual rate and thus takes into account the larger supply available this year as the result of the bumper harvest in 1937. At the same time, the January rate was below last year's crop value, thus allowing for the inroads made into this year's supply by the abnormally large sales of 1937.

On the basis of this estimate of the quantity which will be marketed in 1938, a price index for farm products of 62.7 would result in the estimates income of $6,501,000,000 for 1938. The price index in February was 66.4, or only slightly above the index required to produce the estimated income, and prices of farm products are still on the decline, the index having dropped from 69.9 in January, and from the inflationary peak of 89.7 in January, 1937.

Night Club Bills Arranged for Cherry Visitors

Lotus Featuring New Edition of Earl Lindsay's Chorus.

By Chanticleer

Residents of the many States attracted to Washington this week by the first cherry blossoms will find ample reason to extend their holiday past the daylight hours. Night spots, with an eye to the spring pilgrimage, have made ready with an assortment of fresh and glamorous entertainment.

At the Lotus, there's a new edition of Earl Lindsay's chorus which takes you to Cuba in a series of native dances and rhumbas. The Dupont and Clark dance team carry out the theme of the revue with a tango, but click to a novelty number called "At the Darktown Strutters Ball." Iris Wayne, an attractive acrobatic dancer, has been held over for another week. Marion Dawn and Buddy Shaner are the featured vocalists. Bill Strickland and orchestra are featuring soft and sweet music that packs the dance floor. There's dancing three times daily and revues are presented at 1, 7:30, and 11:30.

A Society Notable.

Miss Ruth Boyce, the singer socialite, is at the Shoreham this week. She enjoyed the life of a debutante before the call of the professional world became too insistent. She has a voice of almost barytone quality and comes to the Blue Room from the Charles (Buddy) Roger's Orchestra in Chicago. Barnett and Barclay interpret spring in some brand new dances. Additional drawing cards are Barnee and the singing tenor, Charles Carlile.

After due deliberation, the orchestra at the Hi Hat have selected a name. They are now the String Swingsters under the leadership of Buddy Angel. The boys are doing well. Dick Reger lends a little country atmosphere to the entertainment with his hill billy songs. Jack Hood, with the poker face, has a way of his own with the ivories and dazzles with rippling rhythm.

The Snow White influence noted again. An innovation in the Madrillon Orchestra is the presentation of "Whistle While You Work," from the movie now breaking Washington boxoffice records, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." The arrangement by Gerson Kaufman calls for two tin fifes, both played at the same time, and both played by Gerson Kaufman. Another arrangement by Gerson is "Naga Saki." 'Tis reported that the entire orchestra will go partying at Solomons Island this week-end.

Collegians Here.

Another sign of spring. Boys from nearby colleges are making a dash for our fair city on spring vacation. Noted at the Shar-Zad last night was a delegation of 12 from the University of Pennsylvania. They aproved 100 per cent of Evelyn Oakes and kept calling her back for encores.

At the Wardman Park, visiting "Brother Rats" from V. M. I. came down from Lexington, Va., to enjoy the "swing music" of Paul Kain's Orchestra. Compositions when they return wil include a note of thanks to him for playing all their favorite numbers.

Miss Nena Corrinda is the lovely lady added to the Pall Mall entertainment. Her voice is a melody from the sky. The Pall Mallettes, who have been steadily growing in favor every Wednesday, have a snappy number in store for the "Guatemala" night tonight. Zanette and Manya, the Pall Mall dance team, are artists of distinction that appeal.

Revue Heads Northward.

After a six week's engagement, the Bamboo's Winter Garden Revue departed for points north. In their place come the Broadway Steppers. A special attraction is the sensational "Dance of Life" as interpreted by Mme. Gigie and Alvarado.

If you have a touch of spring fever then stop by the Rainbow Room of the Hamilton for a tall planter's punch or rum collins and listen to the sprightly music of the Milt Davis Orchestra.

At Brinkley's, the popular Mac McCaffery continues to furnish music for diners and dancers without minimum or cover charge.

For a night cap after the sightseeing tour stop by the Russian Trioka for a look at their new Russian costumed floor show and a taste of flaming beef strogonoff.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 22.—The stock market closed steady despite profit taking sales in some sections of the list earlier in the day. Speculative traders have decided to remain out of the market until the Government's budget estimate is announced and new buying has been restricted somewhat. The gilt-edged group moved higher and transatlantic shares rallied from their lows of the day. Some industrials sold off and oils were easier. German bonds closed a point down.

Paris—Price changes were mixed in the bourse today, with industrials showing fractional changes. Rentes finished 15 to 60 centimes higher and Suez Canal gained 175 francs. Banking issues remained quiet while government bonds closed firm.

Liverpool—Continued pressure of Australian offers and excellent growing weather in western Europe caused wheat futures to sell off and close 7/8d to 1 1/4d lower. Prices rallied slightly at the finish on March covering. Cotton futures eased under May liquidation and scattered realising and final prices were 6 points down. The poor textile business at Manchester was also an influencing factor.

There's an old saying that a tea kettle won't boil while you watch it. Opportunity is pretty much the same way—it'll shy away from you if you're too eager to grab it. But if you'll turn your back on it, it's liable to sneak up on you.

I knew a fella out here whose only ambition was to see his poem in print. Finally he got discouraged and turned to actin' in pictures and made a huge success.

The other day I met him and noticed a proud gleam in his eye and when I mentioned it, he says "I was never so happy in all my life!" He says "My girl is suin' me for $10,000 breach of promise and the newspaper is publishin' the poems I wrote her!"

New Snag Hit On Jefferson Memorial Plan

Commission Fails to Agree on Design; 14th St. Site Is Confirmed.

The Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission appeared last night to have become embroiled in another controversy after a two-hour meeting failed to produce an expected announcement of new plans for the memorial.

Representative Boylan (Democrat), of New York, who earlier in the day had predicted that a formal announcement of the commission decision would be made following the afternoon meeting, said the delay was caused by absence of three members.

Other members indicated, however, that the commission was still in disagreement over details of the modified design for the memorial.

Site on Fourteenth Street.

Boylan confirmed earlier reports that the commission had agreed on a new site, at a point 450 feet south of the Tidal Basin, west of Fourteenth street, where there are tennis courts.

"This site overcomes the two major objections against the original site on the Tidal Basin: that it would have interfered with the flow of the basin and necessitated destruction of the cherry trees," he said.

He refused, however, to discuss the new design, but added that another meeting of the commission will be held Tuesday.

Roosevelt Consulted.

Earlier in the day Boylan conferred with President Roosevelt at the White House regarding the commission's new plans, but he did not reveal the President's attitude.

The President initiated the move for modification of the memorial early this year by calling members of the House into conference and suggesting that the commission drop its original plan which aroused so much antagonism last year.

While the commission has been authorized to expend $3,000,000 for the memorial, no appropriation has been made. The House last year refused to appropriate an initial $500,000 recommended by the Budget Bureau.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt asked the Nation to observe Jefferson's birthday on April 13 with ceremonies in schools and churches. The request, made in an official proclamation, urged display of flags on the anniversary this year and in succeeding years.

Green Says He Will Approve Amendments to Labor Relations Act if They Are Revised.

William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, told a Senate Sub-Committee on Education and Labor he would approve the amendments proposed by Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, to the labor relations act if the amendments were revised. Wagner has proposed to make the act apply to all employers benefiting from Federal grants, loans or contracts.

Green said he was opposed to extending authority of the National Labor Relations Board where it might favor one union over another. Green suggested that a court instead of the board determine whether a contractor has violated the labor act. He said he saw "great danger" to the maintenance of union contracts in the broad discretionary powers which the Wagner amendments would give the board.

The House Labor sub-committee, drafting a new wage-hour bill, has virtually agreed on a starting minimum wage of 20 or 25 cents an hour but is deadlocked on whether to make the annual increases mandatory, Chairman Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, said yesterday. An alternate proposal would let an administrative agency vary the increases in relation to the cost of living and other factors.

The Senate Banking Committee approved the nomination of Ernest C. Draper, an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, to be a member of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Draper was born in Washington, but engaged in business in New York City.

A bill to exempt from sale because of loans owed to Federal agencies, seed needed by farmers for planting, was approved by the Senate Agricultural Committee. Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, author of the measure, said that in recent droughts and crop disasters farmers who had obtained Government seed loans frequently were required to sell seed they needed for planting in the following season to satisfy loan liens held by the Government.

A $40,000,000 appropriation for 1939 needs of the Rural Electrification Administration was approved by the House. The measure was then sent to the White House since it had been previously approved by the Senate. The Senate completed Congressional action of an appropriation of $1,403,683,526 to finance the Treasury and Postoffice departments in the next fiscal year.

Supreme Court Justice Hugo L. Black lunched in the Senate restaurant yesterday with a group of his former colleagues. One of his fellow lunchers, Senator Sherman Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, declared the former Alabama Senator was "well, happy in his work and ten pounds heavier."

A House resolution requesting the President to set aside April of each year as "cancer control month" was approved by the Senate.

Northwest to Get New U.S. Buildings

Extension of the Federal public building area in the vicinity of Rock Creek Parkway and the Lincoln Memorial was authorized Monday when the House passed a Senate bill amending an act to provide for construction of certain buildings.

Under provisions of the measure, which passed the Senate last summer, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to acquire land and buildings within the area west of Nineteenth street northwest, bounded by New York avenue, E street, and the Potomac River as well as a few additional squares.

Seven Va. Postmasters Confirmed by Senate

By the Associated Press.

The Senate confirmed yesterday these postmaster nominations:

D. C. Promised Action in House On Marihuana

Bill to Put Teeth in Law for Narcotic Control to Be Reported.

A favorable report was indicated yesterday on a bill to strengthen local control of the sale of narcotics following a public hearing at which evils of the smoking of marihuana cigarettes were cited.

Chairman McGehee (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the Judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee, said the bill will be reported to the full committee with minor amendments suggested by Health Officer George C. Ruhland.

William V. Mahoney, of the Allied Organizations of Washington, told the sub-committee the marihuna cigarette smoking habit had invaded Washington "to a certain extent," and that Washington police are unable to halt it.

W. J. Tucker, of the District School Association, said the "reefers" were peddled among Washington school children.

Detective Sergt. Daniel H. Jones, of the police narcotics squad, stated, however, that an investigation of complaints and newspaper stories of the sale of marihuana cigarettes to local school children had failed to produce any substantial evidence.

The drug was characterized by Mrs. Lloyd W. Biddle, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, as "the most deadly thing, for women and girls in particular, that has ever been introduced in this country."

The bill was indorsed by Health Officer Ruhland, the Rev. Charles H. Butler, of the Federation of Churches, and Dr. Augustus C. Taylor, president of the District Pharmacy Board.

Reading Test Slated.

A test of reading ability, taken anonymously, will be given interested adults at 7:30 p. m. today in the lecture room of the Northeastern Branch of the Public Library, Seventh street and Maryland avenue northeast, it was announced yesterday.

PERSISTENT BACKACHE

Look To Your Kidneys They May Need Attention

It's an old saying that "thousands have kidney weakness and don't know it."

Backache may or may not come from bad functioning kidneys, but it often does.

Much of the waste, excess acids and poisons are drawn from the blood and expelled thru the kidneys and bladder—if the kidneys become inactive and do not work naturally they need flushing just as do the bowels.

So if your back aches—if your bladder is irritable—if passage is difficult or scanty and ofttimes smarts and burns—if you have to break your refreshing sleep by getting up often at night—if you are continually nervous or irritable, it may be that your kidneys need attention.

One good and effective Kidney diuretic and stimulant that brings gratifying results is GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—it's safe—it's harmless—and has been helping people with weak kidneys for scores of years.

But be sure it's GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules—right from Haarlem in Holland—ask for and get GOLD MEDAL—the original—the genuine—Be smart enough not to accept a counterfeit.
